(117 Queen St.)
WHAT IS A CREDIT UNION?
A Credit-Union is a bank operated by people with a common bond of association to encourage thrift and to provide credit when needed.
It promotes thrift by requesting its members to save small or large amounts at regular intervals. It is owned and controlled by its own members. All savings are insured up to the age of seventy.
Do Credit Unions make loans?

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan

THE PROBLEM OF SUFFERING
The world today often evaluates things almost exclusively according to the amount of pleasure and comfort which they bestow on mankind. Anything which increases his ease, man regards as a good; anything which causes him inconvenience or discomfort is regarded as an evil. Modern advertising, paying heed to this attitude of mind, displays products in the palm of the eye, showing their worth, because they will produce more pleasure in human life. In a word, a life of ease, comfort and enjoyment seems to be the final end of human existence.

And why has such a state of mind gained hold? When man expects God and all idea of supernatural values from his life, as he has done in an age of secularism and materialism, he must of necessity strive to create a paradise here on earth to satisfy the cravings of his heart. So much so, that any slight discomfort he is forced to undergo, comes to be regarded as an injustice.
The problem of suffering in human life is one which has always puzzled mankind. How can a just and merciful God allow His creatures, whom He loves, to suffer?
To answer this question satisfactorily and still consider man's life on earth as the only thing which really matters, is impossible. We can only offer an adequate solution to this problem by establishing the role of suffering in the Christian economy of eternal salvation.

The first point to be understood is that man's life on earth is not the goal of the end-all of everything. It is simply a period of trial or probation wherein we show God our willingness to serve Him and love Him and to be united with Him in time and in eternity. Such a conception of life, bolstered by the fact that man has been weakened in the pursuit of the service of God as a result of original sin, demands that some suffering play a part and a necessary one.
The first and most essential kind of suffering which enters into the Christian life is that required in order to keep the law of God. The observance of the Commandments demands some suffering or self-denial. Sin, or the violation of these laws, always presents itself to us under the guise of something desirable, and in order to resist its enticements, we must deny ourselves. "He who does not carry his cross and follow Me," says Christ, "cannot be My disciple" (Luke xiv, 27).

Beyond this first stage of self-denial, however, the true Christian must go even further. He must also deny himself in those things which are not forbidden, in order to strengthen his will, and develop virtue, so that he may be able to resist the allurements to sin, for if he indulges in all which is not strictly forbidden, he will hardly be able to resist that which is forbidden.
Mortification, self-denial or suffering is also necessary in making reparation for sin. The commission of sin leaves a debt which must be paid to the Divine Justice, at least to some extent. Even though, through sincere repentance, God forgives the guilt of sin, there, nevertheless, remains a certain debt to be paid in this life or in the next and one of the best means to make such reparation is through mortification, self-denial or the voluntary acceptance of suffering. Christ, our model in reparation, has shown us by His life and by His death, the need of suffering to restore the balance in the scales of Divine Justice, and as Christians, we cannot be as St.
Bernard says "weak and effemin-at members, under a thorn-crowned head."

But even beyond this voluntary suffering or mortification there are certain sufferings which come to us in the form of war, disease, sickness and other ills which afflict mankind. How are we to react in the fact of these sufferings? And now can a just God permit them to befall His creatures?
The first thing we must realize is that God in no way can nor does will such sufferings or physical evils directly, or in themselves. He cannot, since only a good man can be the object of His will. He does so, indirectly however, not for their own sakes, but in connection with some good which can or will result. For example, He may permit such sufferings in the life of an individual to remind him of his real purpose here on earth, to make him turn to Him in our needs in prayer, or to assist him in turning from sin.
Just as a parent who refuses to administer medicine to his sick child because he fears to cause him certain discomfort can hardly be said to really love him, so too, God in order to bestow on us a greater good, often permits us to suffer in this life.

This does not mean that we should not prudently care for the health of our body, nor still less does it mean that we should endanger our life or health by excessive voluntary mortification, since our bodies too are an essential part of our human nature and must be respected as temples of God; it does mean, however, that we should always accept suffering in accordance with God's Will.
Such a conception of the role of suffering in human life does not mean that our lives must necessarily be miserable. As a matter of fact, it is the only view of life which will make our lives
