Facts are Stubborn Things

So is Bad Blood. The difference between them is that a fact is here to stay. Bad Blood can only stay until Burdock Blood Bitters is used, then it must go. It takes facts to prove this to your satisfaction, and we give them to you every time we catch your eye. Here is one of them. Don't throw the paper down, but read this letter from Mr. Fred Taylor, a detective of Winnipeg. We present his portrait, together with that of his little daughter, mentioned in his letter.

FATHER AND DAUGHTER.

ONE OF THE GALLANT 90TH BATT.

DEAR SIRS,—Having felt out of order for some time, and having no energy or ap-petite, blotches on legs, tumor on neck—arising from impure blood, doctors doing me no good, I was induced to buy some B.B.B. I was very much against patent medicines at the time, having tried so many, but after using two bottles I began to get better, and at the fourth bottle was com-pletely well and around again. I believe in B.B.B. now, I tell you. I send you a photo of myself and little daughter, Lilly. B.B.B. cured her of nasty blisters which came out on her lips. Yours thankfully,

F. TAYLOR, 9 St. Stephen St., Winnipeg, Man.

As Others See Us.

Even in this fair town, back of its principal streets and out of the way almost of respectable people, are the slums and lower classes. I think that this city can lay claim to more genuine wretchedness and poverty, dirt and misery, than anyone would be likely to imagine. It is not a pleasant subject to dwell upon, but some-times one has to be cruel to be kind. Right here, let me say, you people are very gen-erous, and it is a pleasant sight to see gen-tle, soft-voiced women ministering in the homes of the unfortunate ones of their sex, and tending cheerfully poor, sick ones to whom kindness is almost a thing unknown. But of one thing I must speak,—to some of the gentlemen (!) in society can be traced back much of the misery and want, and the poor, wretched little ones, drawing closer around them a tattered garment to keep out the bitter cold, are passed by un-noticed and unpitied by the ones who should be providing for their comfort. Is it any wonder that poverty and sin are rife in a small place like this? Can I help say-ing that until a higher standard shall be taken for the private life of our gentlemen—not until then, will all this misery be averted. It is a noticeable fact that bad morals are more common among the men of the upper class than the lower, and but few, I think, will gainsay me in that asser-tion. Speaking of the poor, reminds me of the Charity Ball so kindly given by the host and hostess of the Hotel Davies. To help anyone in distress is a laudable ob-ject, and to give so many people the pleasure the guests at the ball must have had was something Mr. and Mrs. D. must be thanked for. A gay, bright assemblage of cheerful young faces, pretty flowers, bright dresses, everyone enjoying themselves,—such was the scene I looked at. Being a stranger, I watched only, and almost wish-ed I were well enough known to join the dancers. As the music of the Lancers sent forth its lively strains, I stood and watched the sets forming. Then I thought I must be mistaken as the dance com-menced. It was the music of Lancers most assuredly, but since when were the Lancers danced in that shabby, jingly way—at a cross between a Highland reel and a country eight. When I danced—many years ago—the Lancers was a quiet, dignified dance, rather stately than other-wise, and now they have turned it into a childish romp—the respective corners with their arms around one another, swinging each other as if their lives depended on it, and then keeping time in a sort of a jig movement all through as if they were wound up, and could not stop. Then after the shock of the Lancers was over, I heard a more lively bright music after a time, and which I could not place as belonging to any particular dance. I saw the couples soon start off in a dance, which I was told was the "Berlin." Well, it originated in Berlin, it is a pity it ever got beyond the limits of that city, for a more hoydenish, vulgar, undignified dance, I never saw or want to see. It is indescribable—it is a jig, a polka, a schottish—every thing, and the only aim in it seems to be to try who will kick in the best time to the music. If a dance that makes young ladies pant as if they were out of breath, and leaves their faces crimson, is considered refined and nice, all I can say is—I am glad my daugh-ter does not dance it—and more than that, they never will. Even the "Militaire," is being so twisted and turned from its original-ity, as to be almost past recognition. I suppose old fogies are a little too old-fashioned in their ideas of dancing; but I will say this—young people take a word of advice—dance more quietly, and it will not only be the correct thing, but will be much more enjoyable for yourselves, and more pleasant for lookers-on to watch. The host and hostess of the Davies were perfect in their respective positions, and it is to be regretted that the proceeds of the ball were refused by all but two clergymen, because it was made by dancing. It strikes me that clergymen's salaries are contributed to by people who make money in just as doubt-ful a way as dancing. But perhaps some of the aforesaid clergymen were unseen watchers, and raised their objection on the score of the "Berlin"—who knows?

Speaking of clergymen reminds me of the great question of the day—temperance—and what earnest workers in the cause Charlottetown can boast of! It seems a pity that the place should be in the position it is in now, and what is the outcome of it to be, I wonder! The Scott Act and Free Rum are, to my mind, one; and I often think that if the earnest workers among the women were to see the evils arising from it that men see, they would not so earnestly champion its cause. But wilful woman will have her way to the end of time, I suppose, and there is no use talk-ing to them. But it appears to me that women unsex themselves when they go on a canvassing campaign, whether it be on a temperance one or otherwise. The best temperance work that can be done by women is in the home—by home influence and home duties well performed. It is a mistaken enthusiasm which prompts women to try and take men's places in such work as this, and sometimes it does more harm than good. One of the very great causes of intemperance, in this and many other cities, is that of growing boys and girls having no places of amusement, and being debarred from enjoying themselves at home. They are gradually made fit subjects for temptation, and the gilded saloons and tempting friends soon catch the unwary; and after the first step is taken, the rest is easy. If homes were made pleasanter, if young people had more friends and more liberties in their own homes, temptation would not be so easy to fall into, and women's work would be well done.

"The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," but not when it comes out of its own sphere, and aspires to do the work that only strong men are capable of and are suited for. I am a great respecter of women, and no place, does it seem to me, do they fit so well as that of the gentle, tender, patient mother and head of the house—as the consoler of childish grief and older sorrows—as the patient listener to a husband's trials, and helper in his diffi-culties—as the bright guiding star through life of sons and daughters who have been blessed by her love, watched over by her care, and who hope to some day reward the mother who taught them their prayers and early imbued them with the truest, purest thoughts they will ever know. Then, when loving hands have laid that mother to rest, who will say her work was not well done? Of those she loved, who would wish her to be other than what she was? Her home was her world, her husband and children the people in it, and her burden was sometimes a heavy one. But she loved it cheerfully and when the time came gladly laid it down to accept the rest she had earned by her faithfulness.

But I am wandering far away from my subject, as I commenced it, and I hope my readers will pardon the digression. To re-turn to Charlottetown, its people, its society, its charity disposed, and its earnest tem-perature workers, I must say that I have found more really hospitable people here than anywhere I have been, when they are so disposed. If they are kind, they are kind. If they undertake to champion a friend, they do so heartily, and no more staunch friends would one wish for than some of the P. E. Islanders.

The Island being so isolated in winter throws people more on their own resources, and amusements are hard to find. But the past winter has, until the beginning of Lent, been a gay one. Of course the Lenten season has quieted things down pretty much, and it is to be hoped after it is over every one will be the better of it. Now, I am not going to write a sermon on Lent; I will leave that for those bet-ter fitted than me to do. But I do hope that the Charlottetown people will take a well meant suggestion, and know just who and what they are taking about when they do talk, just what they are cutting people for when they do cut, and above all, be content to remain (without any undesirable ambition to get into society) to remain, I say, quietly and unostentatiously in that state of life to which it has "pleased God to call them." By these means—more surely than by giving themselves airs and posing as superior to their neighbors, will they get on in the world, and will be much more apt to be well and kindly thought of.

One word in conclusion, which I hope the young people will not take amiss, strike the "Berlin" off your list of dances.

Obituary

At McAulay's Settlement, Lot 52, on March 31st, James McAulay, Sr., of that place, passed away, leaving a widow and eight children (living) to mourn their loss. Mr. McAulay was one of the pioneers of King's County, and was born at Warren Farm, near Charlottetown, in 1810, his father being the late Hugh McAulay, farmer for the Governor of P. E. Island at that time. When quite a young man James McAulay learned the trade of tailoring, and busily plied his needle and scissors among the early settlers of King's County. Afterwards purchasing a block of land on Lot 52, when it was in a wilderness state, he lived to see the forest disappear and broad fields and substantial buildings take its place. Mr. McAulay was well and de-servedly respected by his friends and neighbors, and for many years was a dele-gate from his settlement to the King's County Liberal-Conservative Association, of which he was a warm and loyal sup-porter.

Political Meeting at Mount Stewart

A meeting for the discussion of the political questions of the day was held at the above place last evening. Jas. Ross, Esq., occupied the chair.

Speeches were made by the candidates Messrs. Kelley and Cumiskey, and also by Messrs. Ferguson, Walsh, Peters and E. B. Alleyne. The tone of the meeting was decidedly in favor of Mr. Kelly, and Mr. F. Peters' action in regard to the mortgage vote did not find a single supporter in the meeting. At the close of the meeting three rousing cheers were given for Mr. Kelly.
