

The next day was perhaps the biggest event of the week - Shinerama. The national fund raiser, which raises funds for the fatal genetic disease cystic fibrosis, celebrates its 40th anniversary this year, and to mark the occasion a goal of $10,000 dollars to be raised was set. Despite any nay-sayers, after a long day on the streets of Charlottetown and one of the most memorable and wonderfully bizarre money counting sessions (long into the early morning hours), the total was revealed to be slightly over $14,000 dollars! This amount is a first and is almost double the previous record held at UPEI. In between the long day and the late-night leader counting session was the Wacky Olympics, widely thought to be one of the most popular and entertaining events of the whole week.

Wednesday morning and afternoon were devoted to the first day of classes, and the evening to a energetic and informative lecture by sex therapist, registered nurse and host of TV's The Sunday Night Sex Show Sue Johanson. This was followed by an ill-attended closing ceremony, perhaps because the day's events had simply been too tasking for the majority of people. Awards were presented to the most spirited frosh, to leaders who were seen as being particularly spirited in their guidance of the new students, and to the most spirited team, Team Brown, who over the course of the week became affectionately known as "the Shits". At the closing ceremony, special mention was given to leaders for whom NSO 2004 may be their last. They included Jeff Clow, Amelie Wong, Breck Palmer, Ashley Dunsford, and Clare Henderson among others.

Thursday was also for classes, with the evening devoted to no less than three bands, two of which, The Contact and In-Flight Safety, gave strong, emotional performances that served as a set-up for party rockers The Trews. The final event of the traditional

We don't need no water, let the mother . . . um . . . never mind

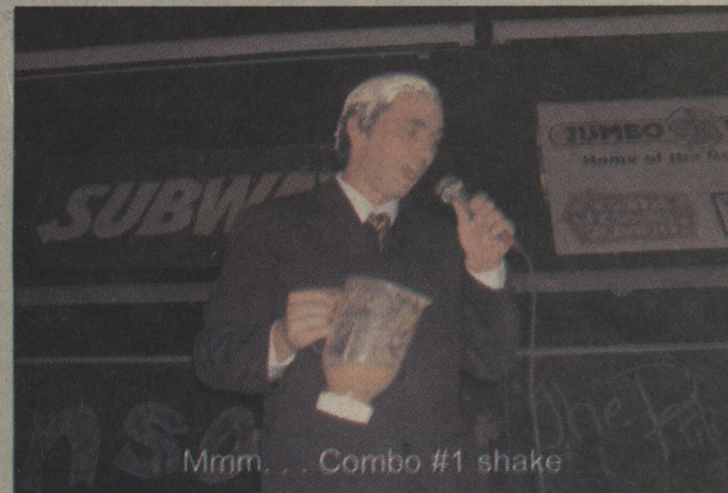

NSO week was the Founder's Day ceremony, though this year an additional event was held on Saturday, the 11th to celebrate the 40th year of Shinerama with forty holes of mini-golf in an endeavour to push the collected money past $15,000 dollars. Response to the week's events has been for the most part positive. There are possible plans to make the many dozens of pictures taken during the week available for public viewing on the web, and any further information on that will be published in the near future.

Fire and a Canadian Flag . . . what else does an Olympic event need?

Shaving with Sue

Mmm . . . Combo #1 shake

Sue using her hand to . . . ahem . . . cover her mouth when she coughs . . .

Nobody step on those robes