The bidding:
West North East South
1 ♠ Pass 2 ♠ 3 ♠
2 ♥ Pass 4 ♥ 4 ♠
Pass 5 ♠ 6 ♠
Pass 7 ♠ Dbl. Pass

Opening lead—king of hearts. This hand comes from a team match. It was played last summer at Pittsburgh in the national Masters Team of four championship.

The bidding is shown the way it took place at one table. East's four club bid, which ordinarily would show first round control of the opponents' suit, was purposefully made to learn whether West could support diamonds, in which case East intended to contract for a diamond slam.

When South doubled four clubs, West was relieved of the obligation to bid, and having no particular message to deliver at this point, he passed.

North then decided to cramp the opponents in their exchange of information, since they seemed to be on their way to a slam, and bid five clubs.

East couldn't very well afford to bid either five or six diamonds not knowing whether West had support for the suit, and leaped to six spades. This contract would have been easily made, but North, realizing there was little hope of defeating the vulnerable slam, sacrificed at seven clubs.

East doubled, and the contract was defeated five tricks — 900 points. It was a good save for North-South. Had they permitted the spade slam to be played, East-West would have scored 1430 points.

It will be noticed that South lacked the ordinary requirements for his three club bid. With only 7 high card points, and only a six-card suit his bid does look quite daring. But there was more to the bid than meets the eye.

With an opening bid on his left, and an affirmative response on his right it was clear to South the opponents were heading toward at least a game contract.

The three club bid could therefore not only serve as a good lead-director, but might also pave the way to a worthwhile sacrifice.

That South's judgment was correct is indicated by the result. At the other table, East-West arrived at six diamonds, scoring 1470 points, the opponents remaining silent throughout. The sacrifice bid thus gained the North-South team 570 points.

Strong Contrasts Underlie Policies Involving Landings

By GEORGE KITCHEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Strong contrasts underlie the basic U.S. policies involved in the American troop landing in Lebanon in the current Middle East crisis and in the U.S. military intervention in embattled South Korea eight years ago.

The landings mark the only two instances where U.S. troops have gone ashore on foreign soil since the end of the Second World War. But the parallel ends there.

In moving into Lebanon last week, the U.S. did so outside of the United Nations. It acted under the so-called Eisenhower doctrine, by which the U.S. offers to help any Middle East nation requesting military aid against armed Communist aggression.

TRUMAN'S METHOD

Thus, the U.S. in Lebanon acted first and sought UN sanction afterwards.

In 1950, when North Korean armies stormed over the 38th parallel on a quiet Sunday afternoon, the United States summoned the Security Council, at that time being boycotted by Soviet Russia. The council ordered a cease-fire and asked UN members to see to it that the cease-fire was carried out.

Only then did President Truman act, ordering U.S. air and sea forces into South Korea. He made it clear his military intervention was based on the prior UN action.

LEGAL COMMITMENT

Two other significant contrasts exist. The Korean intervention came as a result of direct military aggression, with tens of thousands of North Korean troops action in Lebanon. The U.S. move there, though in response to an appeal for help from Lebanese President Chamoun, was dictated by a fear of aggression.

In Korea, the U.S. had a moral, if not legal, commitment going back to 1943 when the United States, Britain and China, meeting at Cairo, promised Korea, long a vassal of Japan, independence "in due course."

Russia and the U.S. occupied the Korean peninsula at the end of the Second World War, each governing roughly one-half of the territory. The division was formalized in 1948 with the establishment of two regimes, the Republic of Korea in the southern zone, with its capital at Seoul, and the Communist People's Republic in the north, with its capital at Pyongyang.

U.S. and Soviet troops were withdrawn by mid-1949 and an uneasy peace existed until the North Korean attack a year ago.

Power To Maine May Be Cut Off

OTTAWA (CP) — New Brunswick is exporting 20,730 kilowatt hours of electrical power to the state of Maine, but may cut off the supply at any time.

That is the basis of an export licence granted by the federal government, Trade Minister Churchill told the Commons Saturday.

Mr. Churchill, replying to opposition questions during study of his departmental estimates, said the export licence is on an "interruptible basis."

He informed Opposition Leader Pearson that the power exported to Maine is surplus power that could be cut off whenever New Brunswick needs it.

J. W. Dickersgill (L.—Bonavista—Willingate) said he would be worried if the province did not need the power in the foreseeable future.

His worry came from the fact that Parliament at the last session unanimously approved a $30,000,000 loan for construction of the Beechwood hydro-power project on the St. John River, from which comes part of the exported power.

He asked Mr. Churchill for assurance that the power now being exported can be cut off for New Brunswick's need at any time.

Mr. Churchill replied it is "generally interruptible power" whose export can be stopped any time.
