BIS Expansion Leads To Shifts

A need for expansion by the Benevolent Irish Society will lead to shifts in several business locations on Grand Street before the end of this month.

The Society, which has found its present basement quarters too small will take over the ground floor of its own building, necessitating Cantwell's Pharmacy and J.M.'s Meats to seek new quarters.

Klark Cantwell, proprietor of the drug store, said he hopes to move to the property at 154 Prince Street formerly occupied by the legal firm of MacLeod and Bentley.

Meat company officials said they had been unable to find a new location. The firm needs a relatively high ceiling in any new quarters to accommodate the large meat cooler in use.

Also moving to a new location, the new Burke building on Kent Street, is the law firm of Peake, Nicholson and Campbell, whose offices are on the second floor of the BIS building.

Another firm, the name of which has not yet been divulged, is taking over the quarters currently used by the law firm.

Vessel's Distress Signal Causes Concern To Centre

HALIFAX (CP) — The RCAF Rescue Centre Thursday night announced withdrawal of a plane and ship which "searched the area thoroughly" where a fishing vessel was reported in distress earlier in the day off southern Nova Scotia.

"The search was instituted after a radio distress call from a ship identifying itself as the Elizabeth Ann was received by Yarmouth marine radio at 2 p.m.," a rescue spokesman said. The radio call said the ship was 70 miles southwest of Cape Sable.

"The Rescue Centre is very concerned about the report of this missing vessel because they cannot trace the vessel's home port or registry," the spokesman said.

He added that an Elizabeth Ann from Lunenburg, N.S., burned and sank in February of this year and the Elizabeth Ann II was reported safe in harbor at West Baccaro, N.S., by her owners.

"There are six United States vessels registered under this name and confirmation of their whereabouts is being sought."

The radio call to Yarmouth was answered by an RCAF Albatross aircraft from Greenwood and the coastguard vessel Thomas Carleton out of Yarmouth, N.S.

Christian Unity Movement Discussed At SDU Lecture

Speaking on Modern Ecumenism: A Protestant Phenomenon, at the first part of the lecture series at St. Dunstan's University last night, Rev. John Keating said that the World Council of Churches represents in the fullest fashion the inspirations of Protestants and Orthodox church members for Christian unity.

Father Keating is a native of Stratford, Ont., and at present is staff lecturer at the Catholic Information Centre, Toronto.

In his address he traced the efforts of the various Protestant sections to bring into fellowship their groups from the time of the Reformation through the centuries until the emergence of the World Council in 1948. He noted that one of the reasons why there was a dichotomy was that the various groupings had lost a common communication among themselves. The different national languages competed with one another. Latin dwindled, and great scholastic works were not understood.

REV. JOHN J. Keating, CSP, addressed a large group of people at St. Dunstan's gymnasium last night on Modern Ecumenism, A Protestant Phenomenon. Father Keating is a staff lecturer at the Catholic information centre, professor of ecumenical history at St. Augustine's seminary and a member of the Toronto Archdiocesan Commission on Unity. The speaker was introduced to St. Dunstan's by Rev. F.W.P. Bolger (left).

However, in the 19th century, two movements revived the notion of ecumenism. The first, he said, was the Student Christian Movement, comprised of such groups as the YMCA and YWCA, which drew together young people to study mutual problems. These spiritual revivals, Father Keating explained; were not detected at any single structure, but they found a certain aridity. It was, in short, an unspoken protest against official Christianity.

MISSION DIFFICULTY

The second movement precipitating ecumenical action was the Protestant missionary difficulty, not one of any single church, but of several denominations. "The foreign nations could not understand the divisions of Christianity, and the missionaries found tremendous problem in explaining it. As a result, the various factions held a meeting to air these difficulties at Edinburgh in 1910. Out of this conference grew the modern ecumenical movement. The very ineffectiveness of the meeting caused the leaders to work for something bigger and better."

Here at Edinburgh the seed was sown. A permanent commission was set up, and from this grew the World Council of Churches. At the outset, it had two groupings, namely "Faith and Order" and "Life and Work."

After reviewing the work of the two, Father Keating pointed out the difficulties of them, and then showed how they were joined in one in 1948 into what is now called the modern World Council of Churches. "It does not demand," he emphasized, "that the members relinquish their own understanding of themselves, but rather, it is to furnish opportunities—an arena, as it were—to come closer together in an open dialogue."

LISTS ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Listing the accomplishments of the World Council, he said that they were of three types: 1. Organic unions of those of similar traditions, 2. Federal unions for collaboration of promotion of their ecumenical work; and 3. the trans-confessional unions of churches.

But is the Council, he asked, losing its original goal of unity because it touches on a host of problems ranging from refugees to the United Nations? "I don't think that this is so," he replied. "The General Secretary feels that the Faith and Order committee obviates the losing of its original aim. Another reason—and one more important is the emergence of the Catholic Church into the popular field, especially at the theological dimensions."

CATHOLIC RELATIONSHIP

Towards the close of his lecture he explained the relation of the Catholic Church to this Protestant movement. "Catholics," he said, "were asked to attend meetings, and although they refused at first it did open a new arena for discussion. Gradually there became a lessening of the rigidity of Protestantism, and the relation picked up a new pace. For the first time, at the New Delhi Conference in India in 1961, the Vatican sent officials as observers, so we have advanced somewhat."

Eventually a permanent commission of both Catholic and Protestants was set up to study problems of mutual benefit.

"But why does not the Catholic Church join the World Council," offered Father Keating. "This," he said, "could lead to trouble for both groups, but more so for the movement." He then listed some of the reasons why this was true.

He emphasized that the World Council is essentially Protestant, and the joining of the Catholic Church would create only confusion. The Catholic Church, he said, is feared, and many might feel that the Church of Rome would dominate if not control the World Council.

Finally with its overwhelming number of Christians, the Catholic Church would have a great advantage in voting, and this would damage the whole ecumenical movement.

The consensus," he explained, "of both Protestants and Catholics, is that it would be best for her to stay out of the World Council, but to work together with it for a better and fuller understanding."

The second of Father Keating's lectures will be held tonight in the Alumni Gymnasium at 8 o'clock. Tonight's talk is entitled "The Contribution of the Council to Christian Unity." The public is invited to attend.

Nfld. May Mark Viking Landing

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Premier Smallwood said Thursday the government may develop the site of the first Viking landing at Lance aux Meadows, Nfld., as "one of the most important historic sites in North America."

He said the government is "taking a good look at the site" and it will be developed "if this site can be established officially as the site of the landing of Leif Ericson and the first settlement in North America."

He said one of the first acts would be to name the long highway which runs up the St. Barbe coast from central and western Newfoundland to the northern peninsula "the Leif Ericson Highway."

Norwegian archeologist Helge Ingstad found a 40-metre "wharf" or spindle used by the Vikings to spin wool at about the same time Ericson is supposed to have reached "Vinland" in the New World.

Ingstad, who has been excavating at the site on the northern tip of the island of Newfoundland for several years, will continue his work this year.
