Egyptian War Notes.

GENERAL SIR GARNET WOLSELEY

is the son of a soldier, his father being a retired major of the 25th (King's Own Borderers) Regiment. The family is an old and distinguished one in Ireland. Sir Garnet was born June 4th, 1833, and is consequently only forty-nine years of age, one of the youngest—if not the youngest—general officers in the British army. He was appointed, in 1852, ensign of the 80th Regiment, which was then in Burmah. The young ensign's first experience of war was by no means a pleasant one. His regiment formed a part of Sir John Cheape's expedition, and the story of the enterprise is that of a disastrous march through a country reeking with malaria, from which the troops died like sheep, of an unsuccessful attack upon a native fort; of a second and third attempt, in the last of which the young ensign twice led the forlorn hope, and came out of the affair with a wound which it was expected would end all his hope of continuing in the service. He recovered, however, in time to take part in the second campaign, and received a lieutenancy in the 90th Regiment. His regiment landed in the Crimea in December, 1854, and served in the trenches. For gallantry Wolseley was in 1856 promoted to the rank of captain, but the promotion was subsequently annulled on the ground of his youth, he being only twenty-one years and six months old. It is singular that Wolseley was thus promoted, though so young—on the ground that 'he had risen from the ranks,' a mistake, the correction of which led to the annulling of the promotion. He was, however, re-instated, and acted with the Engineers, his service as military draughtsman being held important. In the attack on the Quarries his party showed the way to the stormers, and his conduct was mentioned in the despatches. He also took part in the attack on the Redan. He was severely wounded and left for dead in the trenches, but recovered with the loss of one eye. In 1858, the regiment started for India, and the first brush with the mutineers occurred near Cawnpore. The Ninetieth was placed under command of Sir Henry Havelock, and formed part of the expedition which relieved Lucknow, was afterward besieged in turn, and held out till Lord Clyde finally captured the city. In this latter attack Wolseley was especially conspicuous, the commander especially commending him for the Victoria cross. He was afterward attached to the staff of Sir Hope Grant, and participated in the campaign under that officer, receiving the brevet of lieutenant-colonel on his twenty-sixth birthday. In China, under the same commander, Colonel Wolseley served at the assault on the Taku forts, and was present at the capture of Peking. On the occasion of the Trent affair Wolseley was sent to Canada, the steamer carrying him to Boston on his way to his post. He stayed in Toronto for a few days, and started for Reviere du Loup to meet the troops, which had arrived at St. John. When this affair had blown over Colonel Wolseley started on a trip down south, paying a visit to General Lee and Stonewall Jackson, his adventures on the road being especially interesting. He held command in Canada during the Fenian scare, and commanded the Red River expedition in 1870. When it was determined to send a force to Ashantee Sir Garnet Wolseley was selected, and the promptness and vigour with which the expedition was managed spoke well for his capacity as a general. Everything had to be hurried, for sickness threatened to destroy the force, and delay was fatal. In this expedition Sir Garnet's brigadiers were Sir A. Allison and Colonel Wood, who are with him in Egypt. He was later sent to Zululand, after the disastrous affair at Isandula, but took no active part in the campaign, though promoted to lieutenant-general and given rank above Lord Chelmsford for that purpose. Greatly to his credit, he gave that officer the opportunity of retrieving his position. The recall of Sir Garnet Wolseley from the Cape was followed by the Boer outbreak. In the critical period of 1878-79, when war with Russia seemed inevitable, Sir Garnet Wolseley was sent to Cyprus, it was believed to be in readiness for service. He has won the distinction of having earned every step of his rapid promotion, and is a knight commander of the Bath, knight of the order of St. Michael and St. George, and above this may be said to be one of the few whose presence at the head of an army is felt to be a guarantee of success.

Exciting Bull Chase at Milan.

A bull was recently driven to market at Milan, tied only by the hind leg, when the shrill cry of a sweep startled him, and breaking the cord he ran away. Every one near fled in horror with loud screams, and the bull, rendered more furious by the noise, attacked a horse attached to a cart, in which were four or five women. With one stroke of his horns the bull wounded the horse severely in the neck, and with a second ripped up his belly, overturning at the same time the cart and the unfortunate women. Luckily the bull left the latter alone, and continued its furious course towards the railway. Seeing there a crowd of people it stopped for a second time, and a few courageous bystanders tried to catch him by throwing cords round his neck, but came badly off, for with one movement the bull through them all to the ground, breaking the leg of a young man. He then turned into a street without any opening at the other end, and there was followed by the crowd. Some policemen tried to shoot him with their revolvers, but in the excitement only succeeded in wounding a boy and a young man, who were taken to the hospital. The infuriated bull now turned upon his assailants, completely routing them, and issuing from the street, finally ran into a tramway station. There a rural guard courageously approached the bull, and with a sharp knife cut the sinews of his hind leg, causing the animal to fall to the ground, and thus ending its mad and dangerous career.

Rules for Ladies.

Marry not a profane man, because the depravity of his heart will corrupt your children and embitter your existence.

Marry not a gambler, a tippler, or a haunter of taverns, because he who has no regard for himself will never have any for his wife.

Marry not a man who makes it a practice to attend horse races, frolics, etc., because he who sees no harm in doing this, will soon see no harm in taking a dram, and he who sees no harm in taking a dram will soon see no harm in doing things still worse.

Marry not a man who makes promises which he never performs, because you can never trust him.

Marry not a man whose actions does not correspond with his sentiments, because the passions have dethroned reason, and he is prepared to commit every crime to which an evil nature unrestrained can inveigle him. The state of that man who regards not his own ideas of right and wrong is deplorable, and the less you have to do with him the better.

Marry not a man who is in the habit of running after all the girls in the country, because the affections are continually wavering, and, therefore, can never be permanent.

Marry not a man who neglects his business, because if he does so when single, he will do worse when married.

Educated Chinese.

Two hundred young Chinamen lately called home peremptorily from American schools and colleges have had an unpleasant experience since arriving in their own country. They have been put into positions not at all in keeping with their acquirements and are strongly advised to forget all they have learned. The Rev. Arthur H. Smith, a missionary in Tientsin, writes to the Independent: "Many of them from China for ten years at the most impressive time of life. They are filled with Western literature, Western civilization, and the nineteenth century. Some of the students are reported to have learned to kiss in America; but they have returned to a country where kissing is unknown—not laid down in a Book of Rites. 'I was afraid to meet my mother,' said one of them. 'I did not know what to do.' Having lived for a decade in an atmosphere of ozone, these lads are suddenly plunged into dilute carbonic acid. Is it to be wondered at that the result appears in ill-concealed expressions of contempt for China and everything Chinese? The young men, however, at last accounts, have received permission to return to the United States and complete their studies.

The Hessian Fly.

The Hessian fly has appeared in considerable force in some parts of the Province, and there is danger that it will seriously affect the oat crop. Between Fairville and Fredericton Junction, along the line of the St. John and Maine Railway, a great many fields are damaged; and it is reported in various parts of King's County, along the line of the Intercolonial Railway. We examined some oats growing quite close to the city, and they seemed to be quite full of the fly. The presence of the insect may be detected by red leaves on the stalk which, on being examined, will be found to contain the insects in various stages of development. They seem to suck the juice of the plant and it rapidly withers. In Ontario the fly has attacked the wheat, and in some places will reduce the value of the crop twenty per cent.—St. John Globe.
