

MacArthur-Waite Wedding Is Held In Summerside

Summerside Trinity United Church parsonage was the scene of a pretty wedding on Thursday, February 14, at 2 p.m., when Rev. Cecil Webber united in marriage Doris Eleanor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J. Waite, Summerside and Newton Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Myron MacArthur, of Kensington. The double ring ceremony was used.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked lovely in a wedding gown of net and lace over satin, ballerina length with matching long sleeved bolero, the sleeves tapering to points over the hands. Her waist-length veil was held by a band of white net and lilies of the valley. She carried a bouquet of red roses and white carnations.

The bridesmaid, Miss Ada Jackman, was gowned in pale blue nylon net over tulle, made on similar lines to that of the bride's gown with short-sleeved matching bolero. She wore a matching head-dress and carried a nosegay of red and white carnations. Mr. Waugh was best man.

Maritime Girls Enjoy A Vacation In Florida

Letters writing is not a lost art, judging by the following. In the graphic description, as given by F.O. Florine Cole, all readers will enjoy every mile of a wonderful trip.

My friend, L.A.W. Margaret Woodbriggs (formerly of O'Leary, Prince Edward Island) and myself F.O. Florine J. Cole, (formerly of Oxford, Nova Scotia) and now with the Royal Canadian Airforce, stationed at Rockcliffe just returned to our base from a most enjoyable motor trip, through the eastern United States of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia to Florida.

Leaving Ottawa, January 23rd, during a snowstorm, it took us over three hours to go the sixty miles to Prescott, Ontario, where we crossed the St. Lawrence River on a ferry to Odgenburg, New York, and headed South. Had poor driving conditions until we got beyond Syracuse, New York. We visited with relatives of Margarets in Arlington, Virginia, from where we went sight-seeing to Washington Monument, Smithsonian Museum, Lincoln Memorial, Jefferson Memorial, The Pentagon, and had a look at the "White House" and visited a few pawn shops.

Found our route through North Carolina very interesting, with weather neither too warm or cold. Once in South Carolina a definite change in climate was noted. Here we saw our first palm trees also trees just drooping with Spanish moss. There was plenty of green grass and flowers were blooming everywhere. The air was so warm we were driving with all the car windows open. Had a garage operator here we stopped for gas along our route say, with a real Southern drawl from Nova Scotia, is that a part of Spain?"

In St. Augustine, Florida we were pleased to have a chance meeting with Mrs. Doug. Gray of Amherst, N.S. We visited the "Fountain of Youth and Park area" at St. Augustine. Had a drink from the fountain water and if a taste carinations. Mrs. MacArthur chose a navy crepe street-length dress with white accessories and a corsage of white carnations. For the honeymoon trip to Saint John, N.B., the bride donned a dress of aqua blue tweed with black and white accessories and a corsage of white carnations.

MARY HAWORTH
Girl Is Mean To Stepfather

Dear Mary Haworth: My problem is my young daughter's behavior towards her stepfather. He is a wonderful man and has loved her and treated her as kindly as possible in his own; but she is mean to him.

I am divorced from her father, and married John 10 years ago, when Janie was two. She doesn't want to kiss him and doesn't want him to come near her, and I can't understand why. He is always trying to please her, trying in every way to win her love, and it's no use.

She gets everything she wants that we can afford; we let her go with her girl friends, etc.; and John never has punished her, nor laid a hand on her, so we don't understand what possibly could be wrong.

Janie is in the eighth grade and gets all A's on her report card, and is loved by everyone at school, but at home she behaves differently with her stepfather. This isn't only a present problem; it always has been this way since I married John.

WHO'S TO BLAME?
I feel awfully sorry for him as he is so good to Janie and me, and I can't think of a reason for her behavior. She knows he isn't her father, and also knows that her own father never cared for her, and is no good. I would appreciate your advice, and would like to know whether we are at fault, or what is causing it, P.Z.

Dear P.Z.: This is indeed an unusual problem, and Janie shouldn't be put on the defensive about it. Rather, every effort should be made to get behind the scenes of her thinking about her stepfather (and/or father); and to try to get to the heart of her feelings about him (or them)—as a first step towards establishing a right relationship between her and John if possible.

Persons with experience perceptive understanding of child behavior will realize, reading Janie's story, that her fixed distrust of John merits sensitive respectful study—in a sympathetic spirit.

From the psychologist's view, there is hidden serious significance in the fact that Janie has been frozen, so to say, in unyielding reserve towards John, from the time you married him. It is the more significant, inasmuch as she gets along nicely at school, where she is successful and loved.

BURIED SHOCK
It appears that a "shock" of sorts lies buried in her early memories, or in her unconscious mind, as regards babyhood experience of a father's, or a man-in-the-family's, very frightening potentials. With it out consciously she dislikes or fears John (in the family) and may feel that he (in his position as your partner) is somehow an enemy of her moral or social welfare; and therefore she can't let herself be cajoled into "closeness" with him.

If there is one thing we do know about children, it is that we don't know what their experience have been (from their view)—unless and until we win their whole confidence, and they tell us freely "how it was" from their angle. So don't make the mistake of trying to speak for Janie, in arguing that John is (in relation to her) a wonderful man, frustrated in his attempt to be a true-loving father to her.

There Are A Lot Of Toys That Babies Play With

By ELEANOR ROSS
An excellent gift for the baby who has everything is one of the cloth picture books which has a little foam-rubber stuffed doll attached. The colors and the theme of this book-and-toy combination have been keyed to ages six months to three years.

One book put out by this same publisher depicts baby's favorite animals going to sleep happily after a sun-down. The idea, of course, is that baby will catch on to the fact that bedtime should be accepted calmly and not yelling, please!

BOILFAST COLORS
Mothers will be happy to see that this Good Night version is, like others in the series, printed with nontoxic, boilfast colors on fine unstarched muslin. Tub them, scrub them, even bleach them as often as you like and they'll still keep their gay colors and texture. Because of these practical features, baby can even chew his reading matter with perfect safety while playing with it in the tub, the crib or playpen.

Incidentally, the publishers suggest that mother might like to cut out the illustrations at some later date and use them as patchwork quilts for a child's bed or as applique on play aprons.

Moving up in the age category, we know that even the preschooler likes to have a personal blackboard on which to scribble. We found one that has great appeal.

Light enough for a three-year-old to lift, it is made in the outline of a round Dumpty figure with white features painted on its oval blackboard "head." Its two front "feet" and an easel are painted yellow, and a perky red-and-white polka dot necktie doubles as a ledge for writing tools.

The blackboard folds so that it can be taken along when Junior gets places. Busy mothers can keep sick-a-bed small fry busy washing off their blackboards with a sudsy cloth while Mom does the same for tiny hands and faces.

KEEP IN TRIM
Reducers Should Guard Against Flabby Arms

By IDA JEAN KAIN
Fat settles in lazy muscle areas where it is least apt to be disturbed. The two areas which have the greatest tendency to become flabby are the backs of the upper arms and the muscles which flank the inner border of the thighline. Analyzed, these muscles are least used in everyday movements.

As weight is lost, flabbiness is more noticeable, and this appears to be true regardless of age. In today's letter, a young homemaker sends an urgent request for toning measures.

"Please help! Last March at the age of 25, I weighed 193 pounds. My measurements were bust 42, waist 35, hips 48. One day my husband brought home a calorie chart—and I took the hint. On a 1200-calorie a day diet I reduced 63 pounds, without pills or drugs. I now weigh 130 pounds. My new measurements are: bust 35, waist 25, hips 35. My bust measurement is what my waist used to be!

"I feel wonderful, but my problem is that my upper arms and my thighs are very flabby. Apparently I need special exercises for those spots."

ADMIRABLE JOB
This dieter has done an admirable job of losing weight as well as slimming her measurements to perfect proportions. So here are the needed exercises:

churches, and private practitioners. My advice is to get professional help of this type, in gently unraveling the mystery of Janie's attitude—which ought to be done for her sake primarily. M.H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Folks Do Appreciate The Big Old Woodpile
A storm today? Yes one of February's own with wintry drifts, wind-swept and white. Not that in this spot where the houses find much shelter from the sun, round woodlands and hills, found it to be "a ragging snowstorm" but at the same time, one which with the restless snowfall spread field and path, and kept the housewives pretty well to their precincts in-door.

This evening saw a succeeding calm. And tonight the drifts of day still. Odd stars are now alight in the dark velvet of sky. We saw them when we came a few minutes ago from the house across the lane, small tapers lit above our world of white. And it came to mind then, as we managed with James' reminder to "keep on the old path, Ellen, it will bear you up" that the moon now promising to rise will look out on a beautiful scene: fields white, evergreens festively snow-adorned, roofs too. And from the houses here and there, the lights from windows and yards spreading their honey beams along the new reaches of snow.

Because of the weather there was no talk of the woods' work today. Though we recall now with a chuckle that James, passing the open door of the woodshed where we gathered the Sunday-kindling-wood came in to take stock of our remaining stores of fuel.

"It's a day like this, Ellen" he offered "that makes folks appreciate the blessing of having plenty of wood." He watched a gust of wind chase a drift along the yard. "How would you like to hold cat-sticks at a chopping-block in this?" he asked with a smile. But after all what difference - the comfort of the seasoned and prepared hardwood sticks or the challenge of preparing and using that drawn across a drift along the yard as with it "the heart beats young!"

WIFE PRESERVERS
The striped print is very important this year and it is nicely handled for a resort dress that is geared to carry on right through summer. The color scheme of greens and blue with touches of yellow is most effective and becoming. Skirt is all around pleated from the waist falling softly into flared fullness. The softly handled shirt-waist is comfortable and pretty. Fabric is an acetate and cotton mixture for easy laundering. That enduring classic, the shirt-waist dress is certainly tops this year!
