

mangled again with the crowd. In a very few minutes a brother sprig jogged his arm and in an undertone, said: "Do you cut or carry?" "Jarry," said Criedland; without knowing the meaning either of the question or the reply. "Then come along with me," rejoined his interrogator. Criedland complied; and in a few moments his companion snipped off the skirts of a gentleman's coat, with the pocket containing a well lined pocket book, and thrust it into his hand. The mystery was now unriddled. Mr. Criedland separated from his new friend as soon as possible; alarmed the police who were in attendance, and in a short time, with their aid arrested a gang of about twenty pickpockets, who were identified by the sprig—to whom it had served as a signal of recognition and fellowship.

Talking Backwards—Uncle Jo's ideas flow faster than he can find words to express them, which of times occasions a most ambiguous style of expression in his manner of relating a thing. Going one day into his field, he found that his neighbours were enjoying a fine revel among the pumpkins—a part of a Yankee's property which he will by no means permit to be wasted. Driving them from the field, each of them bolted through the fence with a share of plunder from the pumpkin bed. After effecting an ejection of the trespassers from his premises he hastened to the house to tell his help-mate of the disaster, and expressed himself in the manner and form following.

"Wife, wife," said he, "John Down's field got into my eyes, and when I drove them, the pumpkins went through the devil with a pig in their mouths, as though the fence was after them, and a post tumbled over me, and I'm 'e'en just dead."

A RABBIT.—"Run," said an old toper to his son whom he had ordered to go to the groshop for some run, "run like the d—l, and come right straight back, or you'll buy the rabbit." "Well father," replied John, dryly, "we ought to have something to eat, for all we have had in the house these three weeks is some scraps that mother begged for soap grease."

A Connecticut Jonathan in taking a walk with his 'dearest,' came to a toll bridge, when he as honest y as he was wont to do, said, after paying his toll, (which was one cent,) "Come, Suke, you must pay your own toll, for just as like as not I shant have you arter all."
