Gladstone and Northcote.

To Americus, says the Rochester Democrat, the most interesting part of Sir Stafford Northcote's career was his connection with the joint high commission which framed the Treaty of Washington, by which the Alabama claims were settled by peaceful means. In the early part of his career Northcote was Mr. Gladstone's secretary, and when Mr. Gladstone, as Premier, had the opportunity he appointed Sir Stafford a high commissioner. A writer who knew the kind feeling existing between the two men in spite of a difference in politics, says:—

"Mr. Gladstone always had a kindly feeling towards Sir Stafford, which was warmly reciprocated. The latter often had occasion to defend his old parliamentary trainer from the attacks which were not infrequently made upon him by precocious young Tories in the tea room and smoking room of the House. That very cordial relations were maintained between them was proved soon after in a striking way. The Liberal Government was selecting commissioners to proceed to Washington to discuss the Alabama claims question. Mr. Gladstone offered Sir Stafford a post on the joint high commission, and he accepted the responsibility unhesitatingly. By this means the whole matter was withdrawn from the sphere of purely party politics. He landed in this country quite free from the prejudice against it that so many of his party had betrayed in the heat of debate. He was well received, and in after life was proud to tell of the many friends he made on this side of the Atlantic while discussing the provisions of the Treaty of Washington. The result of the deliberation of the joint high commission may be said to have been received with at least satisfaction in England. The Government, it is stated on high authority, offered Sir Stafford a peerage in consideration of the part he played in settling in an amicable way the quarrel which at one time threatened to end in a bloody war. He was, however, too good a Tory and so excellent a party man that he did not believe in accepting gifts from his political adversaries. Besides he knew that his proper sphere was the House of Commons. Lord Ripon was rewarded with a Marquisate, but Sir Stafford Northcote gained nothing but political prestige."

The Two Parties.

(Montreal Gazette.)

Entering office at a time of unparalleled commercial depression, after five years of Liberal rule marked by incapacity, abnegation of principle, confessed inability to lift a finger to arrest the course of retrogression and decay upon which the Dominion was set, the Conservative Government has left a record of wise legislation, of material progress, of commercial development without precedent in the history of this country—a record upon which the appeal to the electorate is now made. The National Policy and the Pacific Railway policy alone suffice to stamp the impress of competence upon any party, and though these great achievements dwarf all other legislation in the comparison, there have been, in every direction, in every province during the last eight years measures of like tendency in the promotion of the welfare of the people which constitute the strongest claim for a renewal of the confidence so largely reposed in the Government during that period. The issue presented to the electors is clear and distinct. Union and Progress is the watchword of the Conservative Party; disunion and retrogression that of the Liberal party. The retention of the present Ministry in office means the perpetuation of the policy of commercial development, of business prosperity, of manufacturing activity, of Northwest settlement, of railway extension, of the promotion of inter-provincial trade; in a word, of Canada for the Canadians, and Canada first, last and all the time. The advent to power of the Liberal party would mean the reversal of the existing fiscal policy, a paralysis of trade, a halt of material advancement, a check to railway construction, and an encouragement to the smashing of the Confederation into its original fragments. Between these alternatives the electors have to choose.

St. Paul's Ice Carnival.

With the mercury 15 degrees below zero, the streets of St. Paul, Minn., were thronged Monday night to witness the opening of the second winter carnival. The illuminations greatly surpassed those of last year. Eighteen miles of gas pipe have been used in the construction of arches and sidelights, and 20,000 colored globes have been placed thereon. The ice palace stands in Central Park. Entering the palace grounds the visitor passes through an arched gateway of ice flanked with two smaller arches, the whole 60 feet wide and 50 feet high. Over the entrance to the palace, the word "Welcome" is carved in the archway. Just above sits King Borealis, supported on either hand by a polar bear. The palace is in the shape of a Latin cross, and covers 42,000 square feet. The main tower from the ground to the top of the flag-staff is 135 feet high. At every angle of the wall is a turret 55 feet high. The palace will have 81 arc electric lights, and the grounds will be lighted with 106 arc lights with transparent colored globes. At the east side of the grounds are 20 lodges or tepees. These are occupied by 100 Sioux Indians. Walk-On-Stone is the head chief. Evergreens have been placed about the grounds. The toboggan slide is located at the southwest of the park, and is now open. There will be no cessation of the festivities until one week from Saturday, when the carnival closes with snow shoe contests, tobogganing, parades, storming of the castle, fireworks and illuminations.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Bosche's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a Cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles.

A Terrible Outbreak.

A sad outbreak of insanity is reported from Whiteiday, West Virginia. Washington Lake has four grown daughters. Two weeks ago, Talitha got married and the young people of the neighborhood, including her four sisters, celebrated the event by dancing all night and nearly all the next day. On the evening of the second day Martha, one of the sisters, lost her reason and developed into a raving maniac, and four days later the bride became hopelessly insane. Since then three other sisters have exhibited evidences of insanity.
