IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Duncan Sudsbury who passed away June 29, 1941.

Gone from us but leaving memories
 Death can never take away
 Memories that will always linger
 While upon this earth we stay.

Always remembered by his wife and family.

IN MEMORIAM

In fond and loving memory of our dear son, George Ceall Birt, who departed this life June 28, 1951:

The depths of sorrow we cannot tell
 Of the loss of one we loved so well.
 And while he sleeps a peaceful sleep
 His memory we shall always keep.

What would we give, his hand to clasp
 His patient face to see;
 To hear his voice, to see his smile
 As in the days that used to be.

Lovingly remembered by mother and dad.

The Unlatched Door

By Frank Price

PART III
 "What I do is nobody's business! Get that into your thick head and get it for keeps. I don't answer to anyone for my doings. But if you want to know, I was fed to the teeth with that rotten show, and when Kruger cleared off like that I simply couldn't stand any more of you and Sammy, so I walked out on you!"

"That won't wash!" said the man gruffly. "If you feel that way about both of us why did you give Sammy the tip to follow you?"

"What?" The woman's voice rose thinly. "Who says he followed me?"

"I do. Where else would he have gone? He said he was going to the cloak-room, but when he didn't come back and I didn't find him there, I guessed he's sloped with you."

"I never saw him! I never saw him!" the woman sounded almost hysterical.

"Do you mean he isn't inside?"

"I don't know where he is — and I don't care. If he did follow me — She broke off and there was a silence, broken only by the shuffling of feet as if the man were feeling uncomfortable. Presently he said:

"Well, anyhow, it's burst the evening up, what everybody hopping off like that. First Kruger, then you and last Sammy. I call it dirty, backing down on me like that! Why shouldn't we go across to Kruger's joint and make him put out drinks and hit things up a bit? Perhaps that's where Sammy went."

"Leave Kruger alone!" The woman's voice was suddenly lowered. "He doesn't want you or me — nor Sammy, for that matter. He showed that clearly enough by the way he went off. That girl he spoke to meant something, I could see —"

"What, jealous, are you? Why, Avice —"

"Jealous nothing!" Barbara listening, would have sworn that the woman speaking was furious both with the accusation and the passion it imputed to her. "She was no beauty to give me a heart-ache."

"She sure wasn't a patch on you, but you never know how these things get a man!" There was a scornful exclamation from the woman and a coarse chuckle from her companion. "What's the odds on her being in there with him now? I've half a mind to go over and see. There'd be a drink in it anyhow."

"Leave him alone, I tell you! If you go there when he doesn't want you, you'll come out on your ear. Take that from me! But if a drink is all you want you can come in and I'll scarce one up for you."

"That's the talk! You don't seem to be making me very welcome, but a drink's a drink, however it comes. Lead me to it!"

Barbara heard him moving and the sound of the door being shut. Very slowly she increased the aperture through which she had been listening until she could see out on the landing. It was empty. There was a light behind the door to her right but it went out as she looked, probably switched off as the woman and her unwelcome visitor turned into a sitting-room. Barbara slipped out, drew the door behind her and left it as it had been while she was in the flat. She had been too preoccupied with those people who delayed her to release the latch before and would not wait to do it now. Running lightly across the landing, she stepped on to the stairs. Again she was brought to a stop by a sound. There was a rumbling hum quite close to her but she recognized it at once. The lift was being worked. She caught a glimpse of a corner of it as it passed the landing below her, going upward, but could not see if it was occupied or not. As soon as it disappeared she ran on. Before she reached the entrance door she heard the lift stop and the clash of the door as it opened and shut. Suppose it were a visitor for Roger Borden! She must get away! On the steps leading from the entrance to the street she paused to glance hurriedly to right and left. Some distance to the right a policeman was stolidly tramping along with his back to her. To the left, the direction she must take the street was empty. She ran down the steps and towards the bright lights which shone in the thoroughfare in which the Boldovina Restaurant was situated.
