Hon. Dr. J. J. Bowlen Addresses Farmer's Union

Delegates from all over Alberta registered recently at the MacDonald, Edmonton, for the tenth annual convention of the Farmer's Union of Alberta and the Farm Women's Union.

Extending a welcome and best wishes to the delegates at joint sessions on the opening morning were Hon. Dr. J. J. Bowlen, Alberta's lieutenant-governor, Hon. A. R. Patrick, minister of economic affairs, and Mayor Hawrelak.

Dr. Bowlen, speaking as a farmer and rancher for more than 50 years, declared that other groups in Canada are organized "to set the prices the consumer must pay," and that he is surprised there has not been a greater expansion in FUA membership than has been evident.

"The farmer, who is producing goods, is lucky if he can pay himself at all," Dr. Bowlen declared. "It isn't a matter of price—it's a matter of getting rid of the crop."

"The farmer in the west today is farming better than he ever did. We're doing our job well," he said, "but we don't seem to arrive at where we should have. What gets me down—and I'm not blaming anybody specifically—is that we have the grain, but we can't sell it."

Farm costs are rising steadily, Dr. Bowlen said. Machinery prices have doubled in the last 10 years; pay for farm help has increased steadily, yet the farmer is receiving less for his grain.

"I'm still optimistic about what farmers will do in the future," he stated, "but right now we've got our hands full."

Mr. Patrick, noting that agriculture is still the province's biggest industry, said Alberta today has a dual economy of agriculture and industry which gives the province a firmer base than formerly.

Mayor Hawrelak asked the question (in his address): "What is more important than being associated with the basic industry of the country?"

The Hon. D. Harkness, federal minister of agriculture, was the evening speaker and stated that the wheat position continues to improve.

Rev. A. J. G. Murchison Given Anniversary Dinner

The congregation of the New Hempstead Presbyterian Church, known locally as "The Old English Church, Presbyterian" because it was the first English speaking church in Rockland county in 1734 gave a surprise dinner to Rev. A.J.G. and Mrs. Murchison recently at the Spring Rock Country Club. The occasion was to commemorate Mr. Murchison's twenty-five years in the church.

J. Raymond Conchin, one of the elders of the church, was the toastmaster of the evening. Mr. Paul Emch was the song leader and Mrs. Robert Goettel the pianist. A quartette from the church sang "Blue Bells of Scotland" and "Highland Laddie" and Mr. Murchison's favorite hymn "Unto the Hills."

The spacious main dining-room of the country club was filled to capacity. Mr. Murchison was presented with a sum of money, an onyx desk set with clock, and pen with 25th anniversary engraved on it.

Mrs. Murchison was given an address by Mrs. Walter Hennrichsen the president of the Women's Association and was presented with an orchid, a silver brooch and tid-bit tray. Mr. Conchin read a scroll which was made by Miss Martha Neuffer and signed by the members of the New Hempstead Presbyterian Church.

The scroll read in part of the loving affection from the congregation, of the thoughtful kindness in private conversation, the guidance by sermons, and the general enriching by his presence of their social life. Mrs. Murchison was just as fondly remembered.

The Rev. Robert S. Jones, pastor of the Port Service Presbyterian Church, gave the address of the evening, expressing the appreciation of the congregation and the Presbytery of Hudson for Mr. Murchison's long and useful service in this rapidly growing suburban church.

Rev. Luther W. Hollister, clerk of the Presbytery pronounced the benediction, bringing a memorand evening to a close.

Rev. Mr. Murchison was the recipient of many letters and telegrams of congratulations. Mr. Murchison is the son of the late Captain J.J. Murchison, who was captain of the ice-breaker Stanley, Minto, Earl Grey and Car-Ferry. Mr. Murchison has a summer home in Pointe Priu where he spends his vacation.

Grandma Wove Blankets Now We Have Electrical

January leads away toward limitless boundaries—even into a eternity of time. How high the blue dome of winter-sky, and wide the horizon to which reach the winter-white fields.

"Dear me," a visiting housewife said today. "I must shake off this continuing holiday spirit and get to work. We're into a New Year!"

"What work?" we queried. "Oh there's no lack of it ahead" she smiled. "In the first place, we've a fat hog to butcher one of these days. That will mean extra work—curing the shoulders and hams, and others of the pieces. There'll be fat to render, and headcheese to make."

"Sounds tantalizing" we chuckled. "And this month I always look to the supply of household linens—the sheets and other bedding. I make over. And taking advantage of the 'white sales' I add new ones. And usually I end this by re-covering or making a new quilt or two. I find it gives me a comfortable feeling, one of well doing to have something new to show for the winter."

"Will you hook a rug?" "I may—if the family offers no complaint," she smiled. "Though this practice of gathering up the used woollens and sending them away to be made into blankets or garments, does not leave one with much material for rugs! Great-grandmother wove her blankets—I was thinking that today when I happened to see pieces of the old loom up in the attic."

"Would she have enjoyed the comfort of an electric blanket?" we wondered. She laughed. "She likely would if she had lived in this day and age! But I had a letter from Aunt... this morning. She is mother's elder sister—married over in another province. The children gave their parents an electrical blanket for Christmas. She loves it, but Uncle, positively refuses to sleep under it. He says he never did intend to be cremated, alive or dead!"

"This," a radio announcer noted this morning "is a typical January day". It was: air crisply invigorating, and all clean and engaging about—an ideal afternoon to continue the woods work, the farmer's saw and axes ringing out along the neighboring fields; an evening this for a family to go in the little truck to rink all from the house across the lane excepting Alex who played happily until drowsiness overtaking him, he searched the rooms there, questioning the desolation of those he loves best. It was an evening too, to enjoy company about the fire. Altogether, it was a day good to be alive and left to tend to the familiar round of our days."

Until tomorrow — — — Diary. Good-night
