Two hours later Gorham came out to Miss Endicott's sitting room at the Benham with a cool little smile on his lips. It vanished when he saw Miss Dalton at her desk, composedly writing. There was a flicker of curiosity on his face that was not lost on the astute Sara. She guessed that he, also, had expected to see Gloria. Men of Gorham's type didn't bother to look at Sara at all.

Within five minutes he was in a public telephone booth. "Hello, Parsons? I think I've found out just what we want. We'd better meet and talk it over... Yes. Suppose we meet at the hotel near you, the Grandon, in half an hour."

In a quiet corner of the grill at the Hotel Grandon two men talked long over their luncheon. One of them was Gorham. The other might have been a prosperous miner or planter loitering to see the sights of a big town.

Gorham was doing most of the talking.

"It's how it stands, Parsons. I'll flow the thing for you if you don't lose your head and push matters too fast. We can easily clear forty to fifty thousand, which isn't bad on one deal."

"May be not," growled Parsons. "But I noticed that you've fixed it to hand me most of the work and all the risk. What's going to happen when the dividends don't come in?"

"We can pay the dividends out of principal for a while. But suit yourself about taking it up. I'll do it or not at all. I can get plenty of other investments for my client."

Parsons waited a moment until a hovering waiter moved on. "It goes," he said briefly and pushed back his chair.

Gorham and Parsons did not leave the hotel together. Parsons went first leaving Gorham to finish his coffee and incidentally to settle the check. A little later the broker also rose and made his way toward the hotel lobby.

He was satisfied to observe that apparently there was no one there whom he knew.

A little way down the nearest corridor the lights of an elevator shot down to the ground floor stop. Gorham noticed it chiefly because it was his habit to notice things. As the door slid back a girl in a plain blue suit came out. A splendor of gold shone beneath the blue straw, a clear little profile and eyes that were wonderfully, meltingly blue. It was not a face that one would forget easily.

She went directly to the desk, apparently asking for mail. Gorham caught the negative movement of the clerk's head and she turned away.

There was a suspicion of uncertainty in the way she strolled through the lobby as if debating whether to go or stay. Then she bought a paper at the news stand and wandered off to one of the small writing rooms off the main corridor. Gorham watched her go in. He strolled over to the desk.

A new arrival was registering and Gorham, standing at his elbow, let his eyes run quickly back over the closely written page. Near the top something caught his attention.

"Mrs. John Moreland, New York City."

For instant, Gorham's eyes widened in surprise. "Mrs. John Moreland!" And no Mr. Moreland there.

He caught the glance of the waiting clerk.

"Single room with bath, please. I will go up later."

He took the pen which the clerk handed him, registered in an easy, flowing hand:

"J. Y. Parsons, Lincoln, Nebraska."

It amused him to sign Parsons' name. He might not use the room, but if anything interesting was happening he would be on hand.

In her hurried planning Gloria had fixed on the Grandon because there she would feel safe from recognition. At first there had been only delicious comfort and relaxation painted hazily with dreams. There were so many wonderful things she would soon be able to do!

Then the waiting, at first eager, became impatient. She strolled into the quiet writing room and tried to read the paper. Two days ago she had opened it first to the "Help Wanted" pages: Now—she let the paper slide into her lap and dreamed. She would travel. And give Sara a lot of things. And build a big apartment hotel for girls, with plenty of air and light in every apartment and private rooms, and endow it so that girls with their livings to earn could afford to live there instead of in boarding houses or dingy tenements.

"Why, how d'you do? Isn't this Miss Staunton?" asked a pleasant voice.

Gloria's heart seemed to give a convulsive leap and then stand still. In the doorway stood Wayne Gorham, suavely smiling. He came across the little room with hand extended as if they had been old friends. Her instinct had always been to hold this man at arm's length and it stood her in good stead now.

"How do you do, Mr. Gorham." The response was pleasant, but impersonal. For the moment Gorham looking into her eyes of sweetly cool composure was willing to admit the possibility of mistake.

Acadia Graduate

Fulton George Kitson, son of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Kitson, Hampshire, Prince Edward Island, received the Bachelor of Science degree in Chemistry at the 107th Convocation of Acadia University. He is working on a project with the Nova Scotia Research Foundation for the summer months. This fall he plans on taking post graduate work in analytical chemistry.

There might be more than one John Moreland in New York. Still—"Didn't I see you at Beechwood the other day?" he asked. "I merely caught a glimpse of someone on the stairs, but I was sure it was you."

"Yes, I was Miss Endicott's secretary for a time. I am there now."

Gorham's mind sped back to the brief tableau of a man and a girl glimpsed through a break in the shrubbery, the girl with averted face, the man bending toward her, ardent, pleading and tender. And framed in a long French window a

WEED CONTROL ASSISTANCE

Farm producers are hereby advised that the Provincial Department of Agriculture will render assistance in the purchase of 2-4-D for the control of Wild Radish, Mustard, and other obnoxious weeds, on the following basis:

Fifty per cent of the cost of either powder or liquid 2-4-D, but not to exceed fifty (50) cents per pound for powder or three dollars and eighty-five cents ($3.85) per gallon for liquid.

Payment will be made direct to the farm purchaser on presentation of a fully signed and receipted statement from the dealer or seller covering quantities purchased and the cost of the material.

Farmers are advised that, if they apply this weed killer from potato sprayers, it is very important that the sprayers be thoroughly washed using a solution comprised of One pint of household ammonia to each twenty-five gallons of water. The solution should be allowed to remain in the tank for a day or so, then operate the sprayer to wash nozzles and boom. The balance of solution may be drained and tank thoroughly rinsed.

Modern refineries bring to Canada new B-A 88 and 98 Gasolines

The most modern refineries in Canada are now producing new B-A 88 and 98 gasolines.

40 years of research and development have resulted in this gasoline achievement

B-A has added huge new catalytic cracking and catalytic polymerization units to their refining processes. And with this modern process equipment in operation, B-A can now supply Canadian motorists with new B-A 88 gasoline — excellent performance with economy... and new B-A 98 gasoline — peak performance in any car.

And modern process equipment and techniques make the newest B-A refinery not only one of the largest gasoline producing units in Canada, but one of the most modern in the world.

Yes, today there is a new high in performance, a new high in economy of gasoline. New B-A 88 and 98 gasolines give you more power, better performance, greater economy.

There's a new experience awaiting you at your B-A service station. Drive in today and fill up with new B-A 88 or 98 gasoline! You'll get more power and better performance than ever before! At the sign of the big B-A.
