Short Strike Halts Busiest Commuter Railroad In U. S.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Long Island Rail Road, its traffic impeded Tuesday and finally halted for two hours during the evening rush hour by a trainmen strike, approached normal service Wednesday.

The Christmas Eve without which left thousands of commuters stranded in Manhattan, was staged by members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The busiest commuter line in the U.S. stopped completely when an all-out strike call was issued. The road had limped along with curtailed service since trainmen began reporting sick at 5 a.m. about 300 men did not appear for work. The union men were protesting holiday work schedules. The strike ended at 6:35 p.m. The national mediation board, which had brought union and railway representatives together, worked out what both sides called a satisfactory agreement.

Trains began rolling at 7:14 p.m. but it was not until 10 p.m. that substantial progress was made toward resuming normal service. By 10:30 p.m. however, the jam of passengers waiting at Pennsylvania station had been cleared.

Highest peak in Venezuela is Pico Bolivar, 16,411-foot mountain in the Sierra Nevada.
