PRECAUTIONS IN DENMARK.

In view of the fact that human beings have been infected with consumption as a direct cause of drinking the milk of tuberculous cows, the Danish Government have adopted measures for eradicating tuberculosis from Danish herds. Dr. Bang, a veterinarian of the highest rank in Europe has had charge of this work since 1891. A writer for the Nineteenth Century reports that Dr. Bang's work has covered the testing of 54,000 animals. It is stated that Dr. Bang has found that when the tuberculin test is properly conducted, it is not injurious, unless to animals which are in an advanced stage of disease; and that it "may have a curative effect in mild cases." In order to carry on an effective crusade against the disease, Dr. Bang applied the tuberculin test, subsequently separating the animals which react from those which do not. Sick animals are slaughtered, either immediately or after being rapidly fattened. Calves are reared by Dr. Bang's direction, only from cows which are healthy or which are but slightly diseased. Care is taken that the calves are not fed with infected milk and the cattle houses are thoroughly ventilated and the rays of the sun admitted.

The number of cattle which have reacted out of the 54,000 tests made in Denmark varied from 20 per cent. to 50 per cent., and averaged 39 per cent.; whereas out of 132,000 animals slaughtered in the public abattoirs of Copenhagen less than 18 per cent. were tuberculous. Upon one Danish farm, where Professor Bang has carried out the Danish regulations for three years, 131 animals were found to be diseased, against only 77 which were healthy. During this period all the calves born of the diseased cows, with two exceptions, have been reared in health; and therefore there is reason to suppose that the same measures, wherever adopted, will soon result in the establishment of healthy herds.

In this connection, it is to be noted that Canada has upon its statute book a law which fixes the responsibility for diseased herds upon the owners thereof. Under the Animals' Contagious Diseases Act, every breeder of or dealer in cattle or other animals, and everyone bringing foreign animals into Canada, is bound to notify the Minister of Agriculture if he shall perceive any appearance of infectious disease among his cattle or other animals, and heavy penalties amounting to two hundred dollars for each neglect to do so may be levied upon such farmers or other cattle owners. Whether or not it is advisable to make further governmental provision, as in Denmark, for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis is a question which may well be seriously considered.

—The Toronto World says that the Centre Toronto election will be at once protested. It says that the positive proof is in the hands of the conservatives that the liberals spent $20,000 in cash in order to carry the riding. It will be interesting to find in what way much of this money was used.

AMERICAN TOOLS ABROAD.

Purchasers Found For Them Nowadays Throughout the World.
American tools are sold all over the world. The New York representative of an American tool manufacturing establishment when asked where American tools were sent ran over the export orders received that day. They included orders from Hungary, Austria, Germany, France, England, South Africa and South America. There were altogether about 20 orders, and from some of the countries named there were two or three orders. The export orders of the previous day included orders from Russia, Australia and New Zealand, and these were not unusual orders, but such as are constantly received. In the shipping room at that moment stood cases marked for Java, for Ecuador and for Australia.

Many of these orders are small. In some cases there were orders for a single tool, or for two or three; for some orders of half a dozen or two or three dozen to supply orders or to keep lines filled. These small orders are mostly from European countries, with which communication is nowadays quick and convenient. European merchants order these things just about as merchants in other cities in this country would. It costs no more to send to London than it does to Chicago, and it is as easy to send to Berlin as it is to Paterson. The characteristics that commend these American tools to their foreign purchasers are the same that mark American machines and implements generally—lightness, fine finish and perfect adaptability to their several uses. The exports of American tools to all parts of the world are steadily increasing.—New York Sun.

Bad Story Telling.

If Oscar Wilde's assumption were to be taken seriously, that all fiction is lying, it might account for much that afflicts readers, since the lack of morale affects the intellect, and what is done without conscience is apt to be done badly. Of course all fiction is not lying, as all killing is not murder, but it is a sad fact that many writers of novels and short stories seem to have left their consciences and much of their brains behind when they go forth to work—as if these belongings might safely remain in seclusion, with the dress coat and the white tie, to be brought out only for special occasions. Artemus Ward once remarked that he had a giant mind, but did not have it with him, and that (or the latter half of it) is apt to be the case with any of us when we are careless. True, even good Homer sometimes nodded, but this affords no example for us who are not Homers. To come to our tasks otherwise than with all our wits about us and invite public attention to the chance "oozings of our brains" is as if one should issue from his apartments unshorn and half clad or enter upon the busy haunts of men without money in his pocket.—Frederic M. Bird in Lippincott's.

Leather and Kerosene.

There is one use of kerosene which is seldom mentioned. It often happens that when a heavy shoe or boot has been wet it hardens and draws so that it hurts the foot. If the shoe is put on and the leather thoroughly wet with kerosene, the stiffness will disappear and the leather become pliable, adapting itself to the foot. If oiled while wet, the leather retains its softness a longer time. The kerosene does not injure the leather at all.

At the beginning of this century a most peculiar cholera remedy was in use in Persia. It consisted in wadding up a leaf from the Koran and forcing it down the patient's throat.

—A Glasgow paper recently compiled trade statistics showing, among other things, the total export trade in machinery from Great Britain, the United States, France, Germany, Belgium, Sweden and Switzerland, in the years 1885 and 1895 respectively, and also the percentage of increase in the export from these several countries during the decade. From this statement it appears that the total export of machinery from these countries in 1885 aggregated in value about $33,000,000, that by 1895 the value of this export had increased to about $131,000,000. The increase in the ten years was thus about 58 per cent. This is the average percentage of increase of the seven countries. Now, how does Great Britain stand with reference to that average? The purpose of the compilation of these figures was no doubt to show that Britain has been lagging in the race with the rest of the world; but there is no reason on that account to doubt their accuracy. They show that she is still ahead, but that her lead is rapidly growing less. The percentage of increase in the exports of machinery from the several countries named between 1885 and 1895 are given as follows:

	pr. ct.
United States.....	250
Sweden.....	120
Belgium.....	102
Germany.....	80
France.....	36
Switzerland.....	30
United Kingdom.....	27

The average percentage of increase for all the countries was 58; the United States made the largest percentage of increase, namely 250; the United Kingdom made the smallest percentage of increase, namely 27. This, of course, does not show that Great Britain is not still easily first. But it does show, as the Halifax Herald remarks, that she is not maintaining her lead in the race.

FORGIVENESS.

Last in the evening cool
Of the heat baked city street
Musing and watching a little pair
Who played on the walk at my feet—
A boy, the elder, of strong, rough mold;
His sister, a blossom sweet.

When, just in the midst of their play,
Came an angry cry and a blow
That bruised the cheek of the little maid
And caused bright tears to flow
And brought from my lips quick, sharp reproof
On the lad who had acted so.

And he stood by, sullen and hard,
While the maid soon dried her tear.
He looked at her with an angry eye,
She timidly drew near.
"Don't be cross, Johnny!" (a little sob).
"Let me forgive 'oo, dear!"

And the cloud is passed and gone,
And again in their play they meet,
And the strong, rough boy wears a kinder mien
And brighter the maiden sweet,
While a whisper has come from the heart of God
To a man—a man on the street.

THE OLD OFFICE DEVIL.

He Tells How He Evolved Into a Country Editor.

The old time devil was keen to learn. He had gall. He wasn't afraid to ask the milliners for advertising or printing. He dreamed of owning a paper of his own. He experimented in a thousand ways. He lived in the office almost, being there early and late. He made a battery and copper plated types before the first type founder thought of doing it. He did stereotyping in a rude way, making a matrix from blotting paper. Desiring to do his work better, he tried to buy proper materials for stereotyping, but he was bluffed so easily by the prices or talk given him by the dealers that for many years he supposed he was the victim of some infamously jealous truster.

A tramp printer from Chicago made him believe that gasoline could be made. The Chicago man pointed to a big can of the fluid and insisted that he had made it. Gasoline was high priced then. The devil sold the gasoline the printer said he had made to a rival office, and the two divided the money. "Make some more," said the devil. "There is a demand for it." The Chicago printer left that night, and the editor made the devil pay for the gasoline.

The editor can recall his last visit from the tramp printer he "learned the trade" with, the one who made gasoline. He came into the "shop" and was denied work by the foreman. He saw at a glance that the old days and loose ways were gone. Neatly dressed, well kept young men and women were at work in an office as clean as a parlor.

"Whose runnin this sheet now?" he inquired.
"Jack Hill," was the reply.
"I know him," he said laconically.
"I taught him his biz."
And then they saw him drift into the sanctum and heard him say: "Hello, Jack! You're doin well. I want something to eat and drink."

"Gasoline" got what he asked for, just as all tourists do who apply. The next morning he called on his editor friend again, and when he found him discussing prohibition with two or three ministers and one or two of the elders of the town he lurching right into the editorial den and joined in the talk to help the editor along. He was very drunk. He cried and said that naturally he was a prohibitionist, but he really longed to die and go to heaven, only he had become "such a d—— skeptic he didn't believe there was such a place." Then he went to sleep. The preacher looked at him in pity. The editor spoke kindly of him as a comrade who had seen better days. As the editor talked "Gasoline" awoke and said:
"Jack, if you don't gimme a quarter to buy a drink with I'll sit here and holler."
And "holler" he did.
He "hollered" until the ministers left.

This may or may not account for the fact that prohibition has prohibited in Editor Jack Hill's town since the last visit of his Chicago printer friend.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Stagnation.
Stagnation is more dangerous than revolution, but sudden change means a house on sand. Action and reaction is the miserable seesaw of our child world. If these extreme men had their way, the end of the century would be plunged in blood, a universal French revolution. What we have to bear in mind is that, even in a republic, there must be a guiding hand; men of education, experience, weight and wisdom must continue to come forward. They who will not be ruled by the rudder will in the end be ruled by the rock.—Tennyson.

Liquefied air can now be ordered by the dozen bottles in Munich, but just what it can be used for in a general way is in doubt. It is so cold that it blisters the skin at a touch, but its excess of oxygen is a valuable feature. At present chemists are the only customers for it.

How much business can a man do whose system is in a state of disorder? Headache is only a symptom. It is not a disease. The pain in the head is the sign of rebellion. There have been mistakes in diet and other abuses.
