Ring Rot Found In Potato Crop

Because a trace of Bacterial Ring Rot has been found in one plot of Red Pontiac seed potatoes at the Government's Elite seed farm at Fox Island, near Alberton, no seed stock will be made available for planting next year from this year's Elite Farm production, it was learned yesterday from Agriculture Minister Andrew MacRae. This is the same action that would have been taken had a trace of disease been found on a privately owned potato farm.

The minister and R.S. MacLachlan, chief of the seed potato inspection division, Canada department of agriculture at Ottawa, agreed with District Seed Inspector Glen Ramsay that it is most fortunate the trouble has been located before the seed could have been distributed for future plantings.

Mr. MacLachlan explained that the Red Pontiac potato variety is often found to be a disease carrier, much as some animals or humans are carriers of disease, though they show no evidence of suffering any ill effects. The trace of infection is so slight that it cannot be detected except when a smear of the potato is examined under a high-power microscope, it was explained.

As a result of the trouble being located, no further Red Pontiac seed will be grown on the Elite Seed farm, it was learned.

Mr. MacLachlan emphasized that the location of the trouble would have no adverse effect on export seed sales. He believes that when prospective buyers learn of the fast and effective action taken to prevent spread of infection the result will be beneficial.

"We have never had a single foreign buyer complain of finding Ring Rot in a seed shipment from Prince Edward Island", Mr. MacLachlan emphasized.

The seed for the Pontiac plot was from seed grown on the Elite farm last year, but no trace of the disease was found. It was found this year when there was some top wilt noticed, and microscopic examination followed as a logical part of the resultant research work, it was explained.

Accidents Show Increase

Riverside Patients Entertained

The grounds of Riverside Hospital, with their well-kept lawns and trees, together with one of the blessings of a fine evening, provided the setting recently when the Canadian Mental Health Association was host to almost 200 of the hospital patients at a special chicken barbecue.

The Recce Band was in attendance during the evening.

A number of CMHA White Cross volunteers were also on hand to assist with the preparation and serving of refreshments, and the entertainment of the association's guests.

The Canadian Mental Health Association is a member agency of the Prince Edward Island United Fund.
