

It's A Thrill To Speak For Canada At U. N. Committees

By CAROLYN WILLETT
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP)—Kathleen Bowlby, national secretary of Canada's United Nations Association, has been getting an "inside look" at the United Nations as a special adviser to Canadian delegates at the 11th General Assembly.

A special adviser's work, she explained in a letter from New York, sometimes means "pinch-hitting" for Canadian representatives on UN committees.

Usually, she follows meetings of the economic committee dealing with technical assistance and economic development in underdeveloped countries, and the social, humanitarian and cultural committee concerned now with the Hungarian refugee problem and the work of agencies such as the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

At one committee meeting, she had to make a statement about UNICEF.

"It's quite a thrill the first time you speak on behalf of Canada at least it was to me," she wrote.

A dynamic, blue-eyed and white-haired native of Aylesford, N.S., Kathleen Bowlby has been the association's national secretary here for the last eight years.

A chemistry graduate from Acadia University at Wolfville, N.S., and a former school teacher and principal, she worked at the federal mines bureau during the Second World War and later lectured at Carleton College here.

She was Carleton's registrar for two years before joining the UN association.

Keenly interested in education and international affairs, she said Canadians show a growing interest in their country's role in world affairs.

"People write from all over the country for information," she said in an interview here before she left for New York. Many inquiries come from high school students and women's institutes.

Association headquarters here serves as an unofficial UN information office. And the association's 25 branches sponsor speakers, panel discussions and student seminars in co-operation with universities.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Fields Are At Rest

Now indeed, beneath the spell of winter, the fields of the farms are at rest; meadows where the hopes of Spring clover, pastures where will run inviting Summer trails, furrows whence will come the gold of the harvest — all now asleep.

"How still everything is," Granddaughter exclaimed breathlessly when our steps took us to this evening. In the woodlands we skirted then, a branch sighed with a forlorn sound, repeating old tales to the cool night-wind.

"Lonely too," she added. "No life about."

"Don't be too sure of that," we laughed. "Nor be startled is a rabbit hops by. The men say they are not so rare a sight as they were. They often see them when they're along the farms or at the woods' work."

"Perhaps Gage will shoot one with his new Christmas gun," she commented the thought of the young marksmanship making her chuckle.

"And then... Then," she giggled, "we could have some 'wabbit pie'."

But no rabbit-of-the-night crossed our path. Nor squirrel note of our passing. We walked with the hush of a pleasant winter evening for our companion, following after the cool wind which ever went before.

"It's not dark," she said.

"No—even with the sky overcast. The snow on the fields makes it brighter."

"And the lights over the countryside. There are so many now," she offered.

"They make it seem brighter and more friendly."

Our footsteps crunched on the lightly snow-spread way, the sound exaggerated in the stillness.

"It will be quite a spell yet before the trilliums bloom," she commented.

"And the violets... more gold than green, they are."

It's good to have so many places — woods and fields, and lanes, and along the stream too, where we can gather wild flowers. When you think of it, they're riches of a sort, aren't they? Though, as Granddaddy says, "You can't eat flowers or live on pretty scenes. Folks have to find some money too."

"Yes" we agreed. "But as you say there is more than one kind

THE EXPERTS SAY

Big Fashion News Is Suits

By DOROTHY ROE
NEW YORK (AP) — Hobble skirts, tunic skirts, panel skirts and peg-top skirts will enliven next spring's Easter parade.

That's the forecast of New York designers previewing their 1957 collections for the fashion press.

Some 250 fashion editors converged on New York today, preparing for a crowded week of spring style shows by members of the couture group of the New York Dress Institute.

The visiting editors will get a daily preview of the clothes that will appear in shops across the continent within the next few weeks.

The big news of the spring openings is suits, and the suits come in many variations of a basic theme which says women should be comfortable for a change. No strangling nipped-in waists, no skin-tight skirts, no exaggerated bustlines are evident in the spring suit lineup.

The silhouette is slim, but not tight. There's room to breathe in the new clothes, room to walk, climb into a taxicab or even sit down in comfort.

Skirt lengths are about the same, or very slightly longer. Jackets are short, never below hipbone length, and come in a number of silhouettes, of which the cape is of prime importance. Next is the semi-fitted waist-

"Nothing To Do But Rest And Paint" In San

CALGARY (CP)—A woman artist who has a painting in the National Art Gallery of Canada, Janet Mitchell says that a stay in a sanatorium can be beneficial in many ways.

Allowed to paint after spending months in the Baker Sanatorium, which she is leaving soon, she said in an interview: "This is the ideal life for an artist. No dishes to wash. No meals to get. No office to go to every day. Nothing to do but rest and paint."

Miss Mitchell works with both oils and watercolors. "I'll be glad to get home," she said, "but I hope I can retain the feeling of peace and patience that I have acquired here."

NO HURRY
"I used to rush around, going here and there, doing things I didn't need to. I never had time to paint when I wasn't tired."

"Being out here, I've been able to catch up with myself. It's a good life, really. The only thing missing is the necessary stimulus to paint... things like music, conversation and other painters, and being able to study other artists' work."

NORTH GRANVILLE W.I.
The regular monthly meeting of the North Granville W.I. met on the evening of Dec. 12 at the home of Mrs. Percy Howatt. The president presided. HOUSEHOLD HINT

To keep your nylon (tricot) slips from graying, wash them in hot water with soap or detergent suds. White tricot slips should not be worn for more than two days without washing, and preferably only one day.

Due to static electricity, they pick up an amazing amount of soil and need hot water and plenty of soap or detergent and thorough rinsing to keep white.

SOUTH WINSLOE Y.P.U.

The annual meeting of South Winsloe Young People's Union was recently held at the home of Iona B. and Orville Turner with a large attendance.

A beautiful Christmas devotional period was conducted by Rena Maund and favorite carols were sung. An instructive Bible study period was conducted by Dr. Bettis on the book of Amos. Lillian Coles, Missions Convener, presented a Missionary Quiz of 20 Questions in conjunction with the work now being carried on by our church.
