nack who has assisted Mr. Mackenzie for twenty years to get into power has received some appointment, either as a tide waiter, a locker, or something of that sort. But those gentlemen must enjoy their salaries with as little trouble as possible. It would bother them immensely to make calculation as to the amount of tax to be collected on the different qualities of tea, so the duty is six cents on a pound of tea, worth thirty cents, and six cents on a pound worth two dollars.

A Voice—"Give us an ad valorem duty." Sir John Macdonald—I am not going at this late hour of the night, especially as I have been making speeches for the last week and my voice is a little weak, to trouble you at any length, especially if you wish to see your credit enlarged, if you wish to see confidence increased, if you wish, hope instead of despair, you will sweep away the men who are now in power. (Cheers.) I do not at all say that John A. Macdonald is to take the place of Alexander Mackenzie. (Cheers and cries of "yes, he will.") Sparta has many a worthier son than he. (Cries of "no, none better.") There are other younger and more vigorous men. I have had my day. Every dog has his day, and I have had mine. [Laughter.] But whether I am to be at the helm or another man is to guide the ship of state, a Liberal Conservative he must be, or this country is ruined. (Cheers and cries of "you shall be there.") I have been in the last few weeks at almost the extreme west of the Province of Ontario. I visited the great County of Huron, and met with a reception almost equal to this from the farmers of the great west. I met a most cordial greeting, and man after man came to me and said "For thirty long years I have voted with the Reform party, but I have given my last Grit vote. (Cheers.) Our friends have deceived us, they have broken their professions and pledges, they are now clinging to office, not for the good of the country but for the sake of office; they are unworthy of their position, as a child's hand is incapable of grasping a larger globe, so Mr. Mackenzie is incapable of grasping a larger question. [A voice—"What Globe is that?"]

Sir John Macdonald—I am not speaking of the Toronto Globe. That Globe has made a push, a big push—[laughter]—for the present Government, but the push has been unsuccessful. Notwithstanding they have raised the standard of morality, notwithstanding they have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in every constituency to erect that standard, as I have already said to you the handwriting is on the wall, and that Government will be overthrown by your assistance and by the votes of the intelligent electors of Canada. (Cheers.) From east to west, wherever I have been, the country is arising. The Toscin is sounding. The heather is on fire. You see it running from hill to hill, and when I was in the Eastern Townships I heard the cry echoing from rock to rock, across the bosoms of those beautiful lakes, and over the emerald field, "Come to our rescue, John A., or we are lost." [Enthusiastic cheers.] The country will bear it no more. We are a law-abiding people, a law-observing people, but the country will bear it no longer. They are rising in their might. They are insisting on an appeal to them. We insist on an appeal to the people. We dare the Ministry to go the electors of Canada. We dare them to submit the great question of Protection to the country. But no, gentlemen; they will cling to office until Saturday, late in the afternoon, and you will be starving in the meantime. (Cheers.) But you will bear it no longer. I do not know whether you have seen Mr. Mackenzie or Mr. Cartwright. They are gaunt and lean like myself. (Laughter.) They have not fattened, physically, any more than myself, and so the country addresses them something after this manner—

"Bone and skin, two statesmen thin—
Would starve the land or near it,
But be it known, to skin and bone,
That flesh and blood won't bear it."

(Cheers and roars of laughter.)

The flesh and blood of the country rebels at this want of government, against this inaction, this inertness, this judicial blindness, that has come over the present Government. The whole country rebels against it; and, gentlemen, give us but the chance of an appeal to the people, and where would this Government be? You, the people of Montreal, have answered it to-night. Where will Thomas Workman be? (Cheers.)

A Voice—Yes, or Devlin, or Jette? Sir John Macdonald—Or Mr. Devlin, or Mr. Jette. (Cries of "We're ready for them.") They would be dissolving views. [Laughter.] The mighty voice of the great commercial metropolis has spoken by this demonstration tonight, and the same feeling which has prompted you to come here to accord me this welcome is actuating and moving every patriotic Canadian throughout the Dominion. (Cheers.) Whether from the Pacific slope or the Island of Prince Edward, we hear the same news. They will be politically swept off the face of God's earth, and who will succeed them? You will have a Government, not like the present one, all profession and no performance, but you will have a Government of men who do not say they arrogate to themselves intallibility, or the speciality of never making mistakes, but who say they will do honestly and according to the best of their power and judgment, what they think best for the good of the country. (Cheers.) Coming back and looking around me in Montreal, and seeing some of the devices that greet me to-night, it throws me back to a time when I was not so old as I am at present. They remind me of my former colleague, my brother, my second self, Sir George Cartier. (Cheers.) When I see his portrait arrayed before me, and when I have heard, during the last week, his name coupled with mine in every address that has been presented to me, I felt proud that I still live to see justice done to the memory of that great, that able, that good but much injured man. (Cheers.) Gentleman, the saddest day of my life was the one when I saw him laid in the grave in Montreal. There I saw as much worth, as much disinterestedness, as much honour, and as much honesty as could be contained in a human bosom, laid in the grave, and the one satisfaction I have, after regretting his loss, is the satisfaction I am now receiving, that the country is at last aware of the injustice that was done him, that they now admit when he died a great man was lost to Israel. (Cheers.) And I am especially proud to see in Montreal, the city he lived in so long, and loved so well, justice done to his memory to-night. I might say for him, when I feel how much his memory is cherished, when I see the people of Montreal arising to vindicate his memory, in the words of the poet,—

"Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone,
And o'er his cold ashes unbid him,
But little he'll reckon they let him sleep on
In the grave where his comrades have laid him."
(Cheers.) Gentleman, I shall have the proud satisfaction, if God spares, and it is my duty, my speciality, I take it as a solemn responsibility at every place, in every position, wherever I go, and wherein I can get a hearing, to vindicate the memory of that great and good man. (Cheers.)

VOICE—"What about O'Donohue?" Sir John Macdonald—I hear a voice say O'Donohue. I went for O'Donohue. (Cheers.) O'Donohue was a rebel, so was Lepine, so was Riel, all tarred with the same stick, all in the same boat. They had all committed treason, and were liable to be tried and punished. The only difference was this—Riel and Lepine were liable to be tried for murder. Lepine was tried for murder, and found guilty; Riel was not tried because he was an outlaw, but outlawry under the common law of England is equal to a conviction and these men were declared guilty of the homicide of Scott, and that is equal to murder. There is no evidence to show that O'Donohue had been guilty of the slightest offence in that connection, that he had anything to do with the death of Scott, and yet because he was a rebel—

Mr. McNamee—Because he was an Irishman! (Cheers.) Sir John Macdonald—Mr. McNamee says because he was an Irishman, he was by the solemn action of the present Government exiled for life, exiled forever. Although he was born in Canada, although a son of the soil, although he had property in the North-West, although his mother, his brothers and friends, live in that country, he is obliged to stay across the line, while Lepine, who was found guilty of murder, had only two years' imprisonment, and Riel was banished for six years to New York or Boston, where he could go to the theatre every evening if he liked. O'Donohue who was never found guilty of any crime, against whom no information had been laid on oath that he had shed the blood of Scott, was not included in the amnesty. I did not understand that kind of justice and I voted he should receive the same treatment as Riel and Lepine. Now that Lepine has served his term, I am in favor of O'Donohue getting a free pardon. (Cheers.) And, gentlemen, if he does not get a free pardon, it will not be my fault, because I will strongly support by able friend, Mr. Costigan—as true an Irishman as ever lived—when he moves for a free pardon next session. (Cheers.)

Sir John concluded by again expressing his thanks for the magnificent reception with which he had met, and retired amid enthusiastic cheering. Messrs. Masdon, White, Thibault, Caron, Gibbs, Plumb, Stevenson, and Mitchell, in response to calls, briefly addressed the people, after which they quietly dispersed to their homes.

PROMPTNESS.

The manner in which the Insurance Companies generally have met their losses by the St. John fire, is noble. Without a moment's hesitation, the telegraph was made use of to notify the suffering public that the unparalleled losses would be met without delay; and in the hour of their deep distress this was doubtless a very great comfort. Where all did so well it is almost invidious to particularise; but the English companies certainly deserve hearty commendation. The cable was called into requisition; and ere on this side of the Atlantic we had scarcely more than heard the rough details of the fire, the cheering words came flashing along the bed of the Atlantic ocean, to the Agents at St. John, "Pay all losses without delay, and subscribe £500 sterling [2500] to the relief fund." This did the "Queen," the "Liverpool," London and Globe, and the "Imperial." These grand old English companies stood, as it were, on their dignity, and hastened to throw their shield over St. John. This is not intended by any means as a puff for the companies in question. But it has been customary to grumble at insurance companies. In particular, there has been a good deal of cavilling at the conservatism exhibited by the English companies in doing business; but experience shows that prudence is the best, when it enables the Companies affected to withstand unmoved such enormous losses as were entailed by the St. John fire.

Since writing the above we notice that the North British and Mercantile Company, although among the heaviest losers by the fire, have given a subscription of £500 stg. to the relief fund.—Acadian Recorder.

SPECIAL SERVICE.—On Sunday next, and the three following days, there will be special service, held in Y.M.C.A. Hall, at 9 a. m. and 8 p. m., to be conducted by Rev. G. C. Needham, an Evangelist well-known as working with Messrs. Moody and Sankey in their labors in the cities of the United States. Mr. N. is also well-known in Halifax and St. John, where his Bible readings two years ago, were very highly appreciated.

Three Men Drowned.

[Special Dispatch to Daily Examiner.] MONTREAL, July 12. A man named McKeown attempted to enter the armory guarded by volunteers yesterday. Being stopped by the sentry he tried to seize the rifle, and the soldier stabbed him fatally.

To-day a large mob is on the streets and there is great excitement. A one o'clock an Orangeman, with a lily in his coat, was shot dead on great St. James' Street.

The probability of a riot to-night hourly increases. Every effort has been made by respectable men of both parties to keep the peace. There were three deaths by drowning here yesterday.

Austria Enters the Field!!

[Special to the Daily Examiner.] LONDON, July 12. The Servians and Russians are said to have concluded a treaty for joint operations against Turkey.

In consequence, Austria will at once occupy Servia. The Russian troops have been withdrawn from Armenia by order of the Czar. The Russians are said to be preparing for another crossing at Kalarabizy.

Ferry Boats' Time Table.

STEAMER Southport leaves Charlottetown every Tuesday and Friday morning at 5 a. m., for Shaw's Wharf, West River, returning about 9 o'clock, a. m. Leaves again for West River at half-past 3 o'clock, p. m., and returns about 7 p. m.

STEAMER Elfin commences plying between Charlottetown and Southport every day at 6 o'clock, a. m., and plus twice an hour till nine o'clock; and four times an hour after nine o'clock until 10 p. m.

ROCKY POINT FERRY BOAT leaves Connolly's new wharf at 7 o'clock every morning, and weather permitting, plys hourly throughout the day.

No St. John papers came by mail last night.

STEAMER Carroll left for Boston at 5 o'clock yesterday with goods and passengers. M. A. Starr left for Halifax at 8 o'clock yesterday morning with produce.

CORRECTION.—In the notice of our enterprising contemporary, the St. John Telegraph, a slight typographical mistake occurred. Part of a sentence which read, "ordered three days after the fire," should be "ordered the day after the fire."

At the Stipendiary Magistrate's Court yesterday morning, John McDonald, drunk and incapable, fined $2 or 8 days. Thomas Lockhart, for assault on the person of Margaret Lockhart, postponement of non-appearance of defendant, John Nicholson, drunk and incapable, fined $2 or 8 days. James McDonald, vagrancy, fined $2 or 8 days. John S. O'Neill, for assault and battery on the person of James Ormand, case postponed for witnesses.

A BOSS RAILROADER drove a team through the streets of this city in rather a high toned and lively style yesterday morning. At an early hour he hired a pair of Mr. Connolly's swiftest, and proceeded to make some calls—indulging pretty freely as he went along. Getting rather dizzy, and seeing things move faster than himself, he endeavored to keep up, and getting 2 1/4 speed on, rounded the streets in good style. Not satisfied with a 2.14 pace, he applied the whip to every spring the horse made, and after driving at that speed for some time came to a stand-still at the lower end of Grafton street, and stopped a teamster who drove him to the Police Station.
