Royal Couple Relaxes During Ceylon Visit

By GOMER JONES
COLOMBO, Ceylon, (Reuters)—The Queen smiled exotic orchids Tuesday and the Duke of Edinburgh watched circus elephants and perform other pranks in his honor. The orchids were arrayed in all their brilliance on the wide verandah of the governor-general's residence. The show of blooms from India, Malaya and Ceylon was arranged for the Queen by the Ceylon orchid circle.

She admired such beauties as the daffodil orchid, the red scorpion flown from Singapore and the grey, pink and yellow blossoms from Polonnaruwa, the ruined city which she and the duke visit today.

The duke saw the performing elephants when he paid a 90-minute visit to Dehiwala zoo. He also was keenly interested in cool David Weinman, 10-year-old son of a zoo official, who handled deadly cobras and huge pythons as calmly as he might have cuddled a teddy bear.

See Priceless Gems

Another show arranged for the visitors was an exhibition of priceless gems organized by local jewelers. One of the outstanding stones was a 105-carat catseye—a yellowish-green chrysoberyl—said to be the biggest in the world.

The Queen also received a colorfully-dressed delegation of leaders from the Maldiv Islands, a British-protected group of coral atolls

PLAN "MEDICAL AUDIT"

400 miles southwest of Ceylon in the Indian Ocean. A national newspaper said Tuesday that the current reception for the Queen and the duke is "perhaps the biggest tamasha (show) we have staged since 1815"—when Ceylon chose British King George III to take over from the native monarchs who had ruled the island for more than 2,000 years.

It said that even the Communist and their followers have decided "to call off the revolution for the duration of the Queen's visit" and reported that a Communist member of parliament had been unable "to resist the bourgeois temptation of taking his wife to meet the Queen."

Johns-Manville Durabestos ROOF SHINGLES

Made of two practically imperishable materials, asbestos and cement, Durabestos Roof Shingles form a solidly protective "sheet of stone" over your home.

A roof that can't ever burn, won't ever rot. Even under the hottest suns these shingles will never dry out or curl up. Being rigid, they have extraordinary resistance to high winds. And these qualities have all been repeatedly proven in long service . . . for in over 45 years, not one J-M asbestos shingle has ever worn out or burned.

With all this, you get beauty too! Beauty in styling, in deep-grained texture and in color. An entirely new color range includes rich, warm red, green and brown blends and a "roof-of-distinction" black blend. The millions of tiny granules that create these charming colors are deeply imbedded; they add to the ruggedness of the shingle and remain bright and fresh for years.

FREE . . . Before you decide on your new roof see the new Durabestos Shingle brochure. It gives details and shows full color selection. Ask your J-M dealer for your copy or write Canadian Johns-Manville, Dept. N-47, 199 Bay St., Toronto.
