

A DEAR EXPERIENCE.

Silas Ward was a bachelor of forty-five, and upward. I say and upward, because at the time the enrolment of men subject to military duty took place, Silas was just forty-five, although only a year previous he had been just thirty-six.

He was a man of quiet habits and strict economy, and had never been twenty miles from Scrabble Hill, his birth-place in all his life.

If he had any vices no one knew of them, and his most serious fault was the use of sulphur and sugar of lead on his hair, which made him smell like a straw bonnet just bleached.

Last summer business called Silas to New York—at least that was his way of putting it. The fact was he had decided to go and look over the American Babel, and the business was the purchase of a pair of pantaloons. He had need of fifty dollars for the journey, and fifty dollars was a very large sum for a man of Silas's status to expend on one journey.

Silas was attired most gorgeously for the great occasion, and as he paced the platform in front of Scrabble Hill station, half the population of the village dropped everything to gaze at him.

His coat was velvet, with bright buttons, his waistcoat puff, his neck-tie blue, and he had bought a new pair of fifty-cent gloves which had split half way down the backs in drawing on, so that Silas was obliged to follow the established rule for orators—'Show only the palms of your hands to your audience.'

Silas's mother accompanied him to the depot to see him off, and give him a little parting advice.

'Take keer of yourself, Silas,' said she, 'and don't go to poking into places where they've got the small-pox nor the hydrophobus. Look out for them mock-auctions and lottery tickets that we read about in the Gazette, and don't court no strange gals, Silas, I beg of you. You know that you are dreadful apt to get took in that way. York gals is well enough, I 'spose, but ten to one they wouldn't know a chura from a hay cutter, and we don't want no such people here on our farm. And don't go a nigh the sea, Silas; you might get drowned—and there's the wharf rats. They're as dangerous, I've heard read, as catamounts, and they grow as big as yearling heifers.'

The train came thundering along; Mrs Ward cut short her farewell address, and Silas got on board.

Our hero chose a seat near the middle of the car, because he had heard it spoken of as the safest, and when he had settled himself comfortably, and made sure that his pocket-book was safe, and his package of doughnuts and cheese not burst open, he began to look about him.

Presently a hand was laid lightly on his arm, and a very soft voice asked: 'Is this seat engaged?'

Silas glanced up and saw a pretty young lady in a pink bonnet and white veil, and a profusion of yellow curls hanging over her shoulders.

'No, indeed!' said he with emphasis; 'take the part next the window, Miss.'

'Thank you a thousand times!' said she, bowing and accepting his offer. 'I have been in three cars in search of a seat, and dear me! I could not summon up sufficient courage to ask any one to oblige me until I saw you. And then I knew a gentleman with such an expression of countenance as yours could not refuse me.'

Silas put his hand on his heart, and bobbed his head gracefully several times.

'As if any one could refuse you!' said he. 'I am only too delighted to have you here.'

'Dear me! if all gentlemen were so polite and kind, what a pleasure it would be to any lady to travel alone.'

Silas was charmed. It was so extremely pleasant for such a pretty girl to appreciate him so thoroughly—why, there wasn't a woman in all the vicinity of Scrabble Hill who ever thought it worth her while to call him polite and kind, and poor Silas had run his legs off (figuratively) for many of them time and again.

Conversation went on briefly between Silas and his new acquaintance. He learnt that her name was Juanna Price—that she was going to Groseville to meet some friends, and that her lonely heart yearned constantly for a congenial soul.

[Concluded in our next.]

A Good Account.

'To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—all which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit.'

Remedy for Hard Times.

Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but put your trust in the greatest of all simple pure remedies, Hop Bitters that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

A Fact Worth Knowing.

Are you suffering with Consumption, Congis Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs? If so, go to your Druggist and get a bottle of Boscche's German Syrup. This medicine has lately been introduced from Germany, and is selling on its own merits. The people are going wild over its success, and Druggists all over our country are writing us of its wonderful cures among their customers. 2,400,000 samples have been given away free charge. If you wish to try its superior virtue get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Large size bottle 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it.
