Future Of U.S. Hard-Right Is Difficult To Determine

Has the American right-wing movement gone as far as it can go? This last of four articles on the ultra-conservatives considers their outlook for the future.

By RELMAN MORIN

NEW YORK (AP) — What lies ahead for American groups of the hard right wing?

The movement has risen rapidly, proliferating in hundreds of different groups, attracting thousands of Americans, acquiring huge sums of money. Is the tide likely to rise still higher? Or will it runs its course and then evaporate?

One rightist leader urges a great coalition of all the various groups. Could this develop?

If it should, what are the political implications? A third major party? Permanent impotence for the Republicans? Or will the rightists, working through the existing parties, attempt to achieve their purposes by capturing enough seats in Congress and the state legislatures?

ARE "THE SICK"

"Don't let them (the rightists) worry you very much," said former president Truman. "They are so volatile they blow themselves out . . . the sick among us."

"I'd just say these people are self - defeating," said former president Eisenhower.

Robert Welch, founder of the John Birch Society, says the group is steadily gaining strength. His goal is 1,000,000 members. He doesn't disclose the total now.

Right - wingers readily tell you that it is not uncommon for a person to drop out of a group shortly after joining. A whole chapter of Birchers in Franklin, Tenn., disbanded last year after five months. An ex-member said: "We found there was a sharp difference between Welch's opinions and our own, and we got out."

On the whole, however, the bigger groups claim they are gaining members and this may be a fact. Observers disagree as to whether the movement has reached its high-water mark.

Now what are the chances for a great merger of the groups on the hard right?

PLANS MADE

Rev. Billy James Hargis, leader of the Christian Crusade and We, The People, recently announced plans to form a coalition. But rightist leaders generally doubt that a grand alliance will ever come into being.

Representative John Bousselot (Rep. - Calif.), a Bircher, agreed. "They'll never unite," he said. "Conservatives are much more individualistic than people on the left wing."

The fact that so much money has flowed into the bigger groups could be another reason why their leaders would be reluctant to unite and put their separate funds in a common pot. Millions of dollars are involved.

As for the potential political effects of the hard right, some Republicans already view with alarm. Senator Jacob Javits (Rep.—N.Y.) says:

"To accept its philosophies . . . would result in causing the (Republicans) to lose touch with the mainstream of American life, ensuring permanent minority status, or total eclipse of Republicanism."

DOWNGRADES PARTIES

Welch generally downgrades both major parties. He said, however, that it may be necessary for the time being to work within them.

In the future, two areas of activity could serve as barometers of the gaining, or waning, strength of the hard right—pressures on congressmen via organized letter-writing campaigns, and on newspapers with several weapons.

Says a Birch bulletin of one of its campaigns: "We put a total of some 600,000 pieces of mail into the effort."

Newspapers that criticized the rightists were threatened with loss of circulation and advertising. "Use the power of the purse," says a pamphlet. It advises its adherent to let the editor know, in no uncertain terms, why they cancel a subscription.

Some observers say the hard right will simply wither away.

But others believe the movement grew out of the fears and frustrations inherent in the American struggle against Communism. Since they expect this struggle to last for years, they think the hard right will do the same.

Jamaica Seeks To Retain Ties

LONDON (AP) — Jamaican leaders have filed a formal application for their island to become a member of the Commonwealth after it attains independence.

Jamaican Prime Minister Norman Manley made the application at a plenary session of the conference being held here to hammer out a constitution for the Caribbean island.

A communique issued after the closed talks said Sir Alexander Bustamente, Jamaican opposition leader, supported Manley's move.

British Colonial Secretary Reginald Maudling, presiding over the conference, said the British delegation received Manley's application with great pleasure.

Angling Expert Dies In New York

NEW YORK (CP) — Preston J. Jennings, 69, an authority and writer on angling, died here after collapsing on his way to a theatre.

The Virginia-born New Yorker served with the British forces in the First World War before beginning many years of study of the art of angling.

In 1935 Jennings published "a book of trout flies," described as a "top standard for fly fishermen" by New York Herald Tribune columnist Edmund Gilligan. The book has since been reissued.

One of Jennings suggestions was that the tiny feather lures used for catching trout and salmon should resemble insects normally sought by the fish.
