Mirrors of Celluloid.

Superstitious persons who would walk a mile rather than break a mirror have cause for rejoicing. A German genius has come to their rescue with a mirror which accurately reflects every object, and yet has not in its composition an atom of glass.

He simply employs celluloid where glass was heretofore used and has obtained unlooked for results, which demonstrate the success of his invention. A perfectly transparent, well polished celluloid plate receives a backing of quicksilver, as does the reverse side of a mirror. Great care has to be taken that the celluloid is absolutely devoid of flaws, as a single defect would ruin the mirror.

After the first plate has received its coating of quicksilver, another plate similar in size and finish is fastened to the back to protect the exposed plate. The second piece of celluloid also mirrors, so that practically a double mirror is furnished.

The advantages are many. It is unbreakable, though, of course, not indestructible, and could not be well used to stir up a backward fire in the grate. It is lighter and will wear longer, and is infinitely cheaper. Good mirror glass is expensive, but the inventor of the celluloid mirrors claims that he can place them on the market at an astonishingly low figure.

GOOD GOODS ARE

The cheapest in the long run. It is a poor policy to be always going on a cheap scale Don't you know if you buy a suit of clothes made to your order one dollar cheaper than we asked you for it, you will get two dollars' worth of cheap work or trimmings in it?

GOOD TAILORS don't have to cut prices; there is always a demand for High Class Tailoring.

When We Say we have a Blue Beaver cloth, indigo dye, excellent quality, that we are making up to order in overcoats for $16.50; we mean it; it is a jim dandy at that price, and that we defy competition. It will be cut by a cutter who understands his business; we will make a profit on it; we could not live if we sold goods at cost; we have no cheap hands to make this coat up, therefore it will be made A 1. We defy competition, taking quality into consideration. You are sure of a perfect fit when you leave your order with us. Don't forget we are the up-to-date Tailors.

HATS! HATS!! HATS!!! We are doing the best trade. Gents' Furnishings. We keep the lobby kind, and that is the kind that sell. If you want the latest styles in suits or gents' furuishings. call and see us, We are still selling that famous $16.00 suit. Can't be beaten on top of this earth. Drop in.

A GREEDY ORIENTAL.

The Late Shah Was Close-Fisted and Hindered Progress by His Parsimony.

The greatest defect of the Shah was his avarice, which was immense and insatiable; and although this is a fault common among Oriental despots, who feel that their power can only be made secure from attack by the command of a full treasury, yet it injured and often ruined his schemes for the development of his country. If he had been content to spend some portion of his hoards on public improvements, on the repair of ancient reservoirs and water courses, and the construction of roads and bridges, he would have brought under cultivation tracts of culturable land which are now desert and would have largely benefited both his own revenue and the general trade of the country. But he could not make up his mind to spend money, and required every improvement not only to pay for itself but to bring a large contribution to his own treasury.

The concessions which were given to all comers for manufactures, mines, tramways, roads, banks, monopolies for lotteries, electric lighting, tobacco culture, and other schemes were in no case assisted by State money, but all had to surrender a share of their profits, real or problematical, to the Shah. The consequence was that the greater number of these industrial undertakings, which, in a strange country, and among a suspicious population, required constant support and large pecuniary assistance from the Government, soon withered and disappeared, and the Shah not only lost his anticipated profit, but solid and honorable financiers were deterred from adventuring in so unpropitious a country. The ground was left free to less honest speculators, who applied for concessions, not to work them seriously, but to pass them on for a consideration to others who might successfully plant them in the often credulous markets of Europe. Disaster followed, the credit of Persia was lowered and sound enterprises were seriously injured by the collapse of worthless speculations.—Nineteenth Century.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

AN HISTORIC CANNON.

It Fired the Last Shot in the Last Battle of the Rebellion.

The cannon which fired the last shot in the last battle of the late war is a gun worth knowing something about. Hence, the sale of the 8-inch Columbiad, "Lady Slocomb," which is advertised in the Mobile "Register" to take place there on the 15th, arouses the interest of old soldiers and old soldiers' sons, for the reason that it is generally supposed to be the gun which fired the last shots of the war, or that fired so many deadly volleys in the last battle that took place during the civil war.

This last engagement, said an old soldier, took place at Spanish Fort. This engagement, of course, was not a regular battle, and is not, perhaps, recorded in history as such, but it was, nevertheless, a conflict fierce, and fire flew that day as never before. Gen. Forrest had sent to Spanish Fort during the last days of the war a sufficient force of men to guard the place, and among the number was the 5th Battalion of the Washington Artillery, Capt. Cuthbert Slocomb in command. The Lady Slocomb was brought there, and there fired its last shots when Wilson's raiders stormed the place and took it. There the Lady Slocomb, for a few hours before the old fort was surrendered, belched forth fire and scattered death like an intelligent being, but to no avail, as the enemy numbered several times as much as the garrison?

After the surrender of the fort some of the members of Capt. Slocomb's command one night rolled the Lady Slocomb off the earthen enbankment into a lagoon, or old slush hole, and buried it, giving as their reason that they did not want the gun to fall into the hands of the enemy. It was afterward dug up and carried to Mobile, where it was purchased by Henry Badger, a prominent Confederate of that place, who had served through the war, and knew of the excellence of the Lady Slocomb.

The gun was named after the wife of Capt. Cuthbert Slocomb, who went out in 1862 in charge of the 5th Battalion of the Washington Artillery. The gun at the battle of Shiloh spat out its first smoke, and spread its first desolation in the ranks of the enemy. Through all the memorable struggles of the Army of the Tennessee it went and everywhere it gained well-deserved renown. It was greatly mourned, and was at that time, as it probably is now, a handsome gun.

Now the old relic is to be sold. The estate of Henry Badger is being wound up, and the gun, along with other relics of the Confederacy, is to fall into the hands of others. Years ago several efforts were made by the Washington Artillery to buy the gun, and they will in all probability be heard from at the sale.

It Seemed Not.

Our Life Plan.

There is a definite plan for the life of every human being. He is girded, visibly or invisibly, for some exact thing, which it will be the true significance of his life to have accomplished. God has a particular care for every man, a personal interest in him, and sympathy for him and his trials. If we have refused to do our part He calls us to the best thing left. He will choose for us the best end or use possible, and will appoint the best possible means for obtaining it. There is no room for discouragement or depression. Each incident, every experience, whether dark or bright, has a mission from Him. Be sure in a dark day of a light that will follow, that loss will terminate in gain, that trial will issue in rest, doubt in satisfaction, suffering in patience. Take your duty, then, and be strong in it. The great question is not what you will get, but what you will become. The greatest wealth you will ever get will be yourself.

That Awful Thirst.

A New York doctor attributes the violent thirst against which bicyclists struggle to the widely prevailing habit of breathing through the mouth when riding. The vigorous exercise causes all beginners and many masters in the art to try to drink in large quantities through the open lips. This parches the throat and mouth, and the result is that overmastering desire for drink which makes women who ride to reduce flesh despair of accomplishing their object. For who can hope to obtain a sylph-like figure when every pound lost by exercise is replaced by two gained from liquid nourishment?—Exchange.

To Robert Phillips, Druggist, Fergus.

This is to certify that I have suffered from piles for a long time and tried several articles recommended for this complaint, but none of them benefitted me till I tried Chase's Ointment, which has completely cured me.

MRS. JOHN GERRIE.

R. Phillips, jr., Druggist Witness.

"My six-year-old daughter, Bella, was afflicted with eczema for 24 months, the principal seat of eruption being behind her ears. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised. I bought innumerable medicines and soaps, and took the child to medical specialists in skin diseases, but without result. Finally, a week ago, I purchased a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and the first application showed the curative effect of the Remedy. We have used only one-sixth of the box, but the change is very marked: the eruption has all disappeared, and I can confidently say my child is cured. (Signed) MAXWELL JOHNSTON. 112 Anne St., Toronto

ISHMAEL'S MANGROVE TREE.

A Facile Agriculturist From India Works Wonders in a Maine Jail.

Chief Gilman, of the Bangor police force, has a curiosity up at his residence on the west side which, if it continues to thrive, will be likely to prove more of a sensation to people of this vicinity than anything which may result from the November election or the continued fall in the price of lard. This is a pretty little plant, about a foot in height, which Ishmael, the circus Hindoo now in the county jail here, tricked out of a pile of wet dirt up at the prison the other night. Ishmael is already well-known to our readers. It was he who stabbed the Singalese rascal who dared ridicule the faith of Brahma, and he got into Bangor jail for doing it.

As soon as he struck the jail he began to amuse the other prisoners with his antics. He is more of an athlete than has ever been seen in Bangor, and, though he is only 19 years of age, and rather undersized he can handle a man twice his weight and years in a way that simply astonishes the latter; there is no fathoming his tricks of wrestling, for he has catches and holds that have been handed down in the inner circles of his race for many generations. He is as solid as a bundle of wires and as docile as a child. He is a handsome boy, and he became the pet of the jail inmates about as soon as he got acquainted there.

Ishmael brought with him to jail a few of his goods and chattels. They are a queer lot of dinky doddles, miniature tom-toms, dried betel nuts, pieces of cork, spools, snake skins, stones, cocoanut shells and tin dishes—everything you can think of—a pile of common things with very uncommon powers, as Ishmael makes them work.

The young Hindoo is a fakir—not the kind that haunts the street corners and sells shoestrings and patent medicines, for they are the creations of the slang language of the day; he is a real East Indian fakir, and the tricks which he does are regarded by his people as well nigh supernatural. They have never been solved excepting when betrayed by some member of the race who got drunk on western firewater, and exposed the whole thing. These rascals die suddenly soon after.

One of the best of the tricks is the growing of a bush out of a pile of dirt in full view of an audience. Ishmael can do it. He did it the other night up in the jail when Sheriff Brown gave him a chance to use his apparatus, and Chief Gilman has the plant as proof.

Ishmael took a little pipe of sand and mud which had been brought for him in the jail yard underneath the window where he looks out and thinks up new tricks every day, and placed it in the middle of the floor on a cloth. Then he took what he said was a seed and showed it to his small audience. This seed was the same thing from which he had produced a dollar bill a few minutes before by simply squeezing it, but that didn't make any difference to him, but he put it in the dirt and got ready to grow his bush. Nobody thought he was really going to do it. He swore that he would produce a mangrove tree.

Ishmael first took a cloth and placed it over the earth; than he began to say off some kind of heathenish incantation, and in the course of a half minute, when he removed the covering, there was a little sprout starting up about an inch above the pile. That's pretty good, Ishmael smiled demurely and winked the other eye.

Again Ishmael put the cloth on the dirt and again he rattled off his rubbish in choicest Hindoo. Something suddenly stuck itself up inside the cloth, which peaked up and wrinkled as it did so, and then off came the cover with a swish and exposed a very healthy young bush standing there in the dirt.

Of course everbody said that the bush was made of paper, but it wasn't. It was a real thing, and it was moist and soft and pithy just as if it had been newly plucked from the ground outside. At its bottom was a full set of little roots which were covered with the clinging earth in which it had—well, grown.

Chief Gilman, who was present, took the bush home with him and set it out in his garden. He said on Saturday that it was getting on well, and that it looked as if it had come to stay. He can't understand how Ishmael did it Neither can anybody else. Some of the men in the jail declare that the youngster is a devil in disguise, but most of them consider him a mighty smart lad.

But he is a great vegetation starter; he beats super-phosphates at their own game.

The bush is worth seeing; it is composed of close-growing green leaves on a straight stalk and little red blossoms are beginning to grow on the top of it. It's a curiosity.

Ishmael says it's easy as rolling off a log.—Bangor Courier.

The Bicycle Saddle.

When pneumatic saddles were introduced a year or two ago their sanguine supporters believed that they would become universal; but to-day we do not see very many of them in use. There are several objections to the pneumatic principle when used as a saddle or seat for cyclists, the chief one being that the air becomes heated, expands and makes the saddle uncomfortable. There is still a great deal to be done in improving this portion of the bicycle, and although a number of so-called "hygienic" saddles have been introduced, we are yet far from having found an ideal seat.

Even the "Christy," with the broad seat, acknowledged to be the most hygienic form of the article, is not comfortable for all women. It is so rigid and inflexible that the inevitable jar causes much suffering after the ride is over. It may be the "best we know" and doubtless is, but a fortune awaits the inventor who shall combine the Christy advantages with a substitute for its disadvantages.

The Slang Trail.

It is astonishing how the children pick up slang. No matter how select the neighborhood nor how careful the parents the bywords of the street are sure to drop when least expected from infantile lips.

A day or two ago a 4-year-old daughter of East End parents was being escorted along East Prospect street by her doting papa, when they met a little boy of the same age escorted by his papa. Both papas are well acquainted and they stopped to chat for a moment or two.

"Who is this little boy, Mabel?" asked the first papa.

"It's Edward," promptly answered Miss Mabel.

"And who is this with Edward?" continued the first papa, as he pointed to the second.

"That's Edward's old man," said Miss Mabel.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
