Sport Echoes From Prince County

A new "bill of rights" for the smaller Island centres in little league, bantam and midget baseball did not materialize at the annual meeting of the Island branch of the A. A. U. of C. which, in our humble and sometimes mistaken opinion, was unfortunate.

We'd like to make some comment on the arguments presented against such a move. It was pointed out that the provincial play-offs were sometimes underway before the city play-offs were started. Is this arrangement as unchangeable as the law of the Medes and Persians? Don't you think that with a little careful planning the city play-offs could be completed before the provincial play-offs begin? In the U. S. A. they seem to be albe to complete the National and American leagues before the World Series starts, and the Stanley Cup games never get started until they've finished the regular schedule. In Ontario a very much wider area is so organized that all centres are through and ready for the provincial baseball play-offs. So, it would seem it can be done.

The claim that an all-star team in minor baseball would not be as effective as a regular team is pretty much of a myth. Co-operative team play which depends on the co-ordination of thinking which is made perfect by practising together does not apply in baseball to the extent it does in hockey. In professional baseball it does count for something, but in minor ball as played in Prince Edward Island, getting used to a team mate would make little if any difference in the degree of effective play. A player getting used to playing his position is all important in the elementary stages rather than getting used to his mates.

But if we are wrong in this, and a regular team would play better ball, then why not let the regular winning team take part in the play-offs? The best is none too good for these important games. Members of a team develop a certain esprit de corps during the season, and breaking up teams for an all-star aggression disrupts this tie of comradeship which is pretty important in the enjoyment, if not in the effective play, of baseball.

Once in a blue moon, of course, some centre like Kensington (which is plugging along courageously under the discouraging handicap), will win a title, and it will no doubt be held up as an example supposed to prove that the present system is ideal. But everyone knows that the odds are about 10-1 against such a happening. David decisioned Goliath, but that is no reason for matching heavyweights with flyweights as a regular procedure.

If the powers-that-be insist on preserving the status Quo, then at least, a trophy should be offered for a play-off between rural teams, and the winner of this cup could then take a crack at the higher-ups. The establishment of intermediate "C" hockey on the Island has resulted in many teams competing which otherwise would not have been active. Unless something is done for the small centres in baseball, then existing stagnation will continue. Very few small centres will bother to buy an "Irish Sweepstake ticket" for their slim chance at victory and its resulting fame and glory.

The whole town's talking about the Victory Cleaner Bicycle Race held between Kensington and Summerside on the 24th of May. Russ and Gord Kelly are to be congratulated for instituting this sporting event and it will likely be only the first of a long string of such races. Harold Moase is offering a prize of five dollars to the cyclist who is first passing his store in New Annan, and Jimmie McInnis will pay another fin to the boy who pedals past his store at the east end of Summerside ahead of his competitors.

M P Charges Army Made Improvements Before St. Laurent's Arrival in Korea

OTTAWA, (CP) — Quonset huts replaced army tents a few days before Prime Minister St. Laurent visited Canadian troops in Korea earlier this year, Ray. Thomas SC-Wetaskiwin said Thursday night.

He said during Commons study of defence estimates those weren't the only improvements supplied to Canadian troops a few days before the prime minister's call, one of several stops during a world tour.

A radio station started operations three or four days before Mr. St. Laurent arrived and a sudden feverish activity began on a recreation centre.

Mr. Thomas said the sudden changes makes members wonder if the living conditions of Canadian troops overseas are depicted better than they are in reality.

Mr. Thomas suggested that when Defence Minister Claxton visits Canadian forces overseas he should bring along one or two Opposition members of the Commons.

If conditions were as good as Mr. Claxton said, he should be happy to hear Opposition members say so in the Commons. If they were not, the Canadian people should be told.

A Country Garden

ling range. The symmetrical form is pleasing and varies from tiny dime-sized miniatures to majestic exhibition flowers, seven or more inches across.

The buds of some roses are sleek and streamlined; of others, globular and opulent. Their rhythmic unfurling is a wonderful sight.

There are single roses with but one row of showy petals highlighted by a cluster of golden stamens. There are doubles with row on row of petals arranged in regular sequence, or loosely in an informal pattern. Flowers are borne singly on straight stems or they grow in dense or loose clusters.

The fragrance of the rose is so generally appealing that it has become the criterion of perfume and "sweet as a rose" is a common phrase. The fragrance is elusive, differing with the variety, and even varying in the same flower according to light, temperature, or humidity.

When planting roses these days it helps us when we remember all these lovely qualities of the rose, even when the plant we are holding is such a dead looking piece of wood, and the task is not a very pleasant one unless we remember all we know of roses and their beauty and fragrance.

Continuing our study of the book "An Eighteenth Century Garland" in The Spring of the Year, Mrs. Fisher writes...

Daffodils, wherever they are grown, are greeted as harbingers of spring. I think of all the spring flowers we give to them our warmest welcome, grateful to them for their cheerful freshness. Here in Williamsburg they take pride of place not only in our early spring arrangements but also in our hearts. It is not, I think, merely a whim of fancy to believe that many of the daffodils that bloom each year in the Williamsburg gardens are direct descendants of those bulbs the first women colonists brought with them to remind them of home.

Hyacinths are universal favorites and last well indoors. They are, as John Hill pointed out, natives of the East, children of the sun; and if there is a pensive quality in both their name and color, it finds full compensation in their exotic scent. House warmth will draw this from them until their fragrance pervades the whole room.

Grape hyacinths, both the common and the feathered varieties, provide us with another lovely blue to mix in with the predominant yellows of spring. Thomas Jefferson noted in his garden book the feathered hyacinth and no doubt the ones now growing at Monticello are descendants of those Jefferson brought from his early home in Shadwell.

The Jamieson lily, as it is known locally, grows abundantly on Jamestown Island. I think of Mark Catesby, the English botanist, when I gather the white blooms; he too found them growing here and noted that they were as numerous as the field cowslips and wild orchids in his native fields of England. I think, too, of Collinson's lovely, terse description when he wrote to Bertram: "Thee sent me what we call the Atamasco Lily, from its shape. It has the blush of purple before the flower opens; is white within. If, in thy rambles, thee happens on this flower, pray send a root or two".

There are few places in America where the native redbud blooms more beautifully than in Virginia. As might be imagined, an air of mystery surrounds its common name, Judas tree. I prefer the name by which the Spanish know it—the love tree,—on account, no doubt, of its heart-shaped leaves. But call it what we may, it adapts itself particularly well both in arrangements on its own and in combination with other shrubs especially the lilac.

The lilac is an adaptable immigrant from Europe and Asia which can make a home for itself in every country. So in every heart it quickly becomes established as an old-time favorite. We know of the lilacs John Custis grew here in Williamsburg in the 1730's, and it is not fanciful to imagine that lilacs adorned many a Williamsburg room in those eighteenth century Aprils that do not seem so very long ago.

Most of the old garden lists of this country include the Sweet William. Because sweet William possesses a lasting quality and a variety of color it is especially valuable in mixed bouquets.

Next week we shall continue our study of the flowers used long ago in the "New World".
