Versatile House Paint

By ELEANOR ROSS

A PAINT pot with an accompanying brush or roller is the practical, enduring and inexpensive way of bringing new beauty to any room.

Time was, of course, when one had to choose between fashion and practicality. Walls which were apt to get smudged and streaked just had to have a glossy paint, because flat paints couldn't be washed to any great extent. This could be a problem in rooms where you preferred a dull, velvety backdrop, but now developments of the past few years have provided washable paints in both enamel and flat finishes for every purpose.

For Sheen and Luster

Use a gloss or semi-gloss paint, of course, on walls or furniture where a sheen is desirable. If you want a really high luster, you can use a straight enamel, which gives a smooth surface with a well built-up undercoating. However, this can be washed easily and repeatedly, making them a good choice for kitchens, bathrooms and children's or other rooms where the walls and furniture need frequent cleaning.

The newer oil-based flat enamels, or the water-based latex paints, are a good choice where a soft, velvety background is desirable. Flat enamels are particularly good in humid rooms like bathrooms and kitchens, where walls need washing more often.

These paints are highly water resistant as soon as they dry, and can take the punishment of steam and scrubbing. They also seal as they cover, making them the logical choice for a new wall, and their upkeep is simplicity itself.

Latex emulsion (or rubber) paints are perhaps the easiest with which to work. They go on smoothly and quickly, and brushes or rollers come clean afterwards with a simple soap-and-water washing. They are quite free of paint odor, and they dry to the touch in half an hour or so. If a second coat is necessary — which seldom happens — it can be applied the same day.

Rubber paints should not be washed for a period of 30 days, but can subsequently be sanded successfully and repeatedly.

Special Purpose Paints

There are also many special-purpose paints. One produces frosted glass windows. Simply brush it on over clear glass, and it dries opaquely beautiful in white or a range of tints.

A second variety produces an attractive green "blackboard" on a child's wall; he can draw on it in chalk and then the artwork can be washed off with a sudsy cloth or sponge. Still another type repels dust while it's wet, solving the old problem of how not to have grimy get into sticky paint.
