ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER V.

Nevertheless, to speak paradoxically, the existence of insignificant people has very important consequences in the world. It can be shown to affect the price of bread and the rate of wages, to call forth many evil tempers from the selfish, and many heroisms from the sympathetic, and in other ways to play no small part in the tragedy of life. And if that handsome, generous-blooded clergyman, the Rev. Alolphus Irvine, had not had these two hopelessly-maiden sisters, his lot would have been shaped quite differently; he would very likely have taken a comely wife in his youth, and now, when his hair was getting gray under the powder, would have had tall sons and blooming daughters—such possessions, in short, as men commonly think will repay them for all the labor they take under the sun. As it was —having with all his three livings no more than seven hundred a year, and seeing no way of keeping his splendid mother and his sickly sister, not to reckon a second sister, who was usually spoken of without any adjective, in such lady-like ease as became their birth and habit, and at the same time of providing for a family of his own—he remained, you see, at the age of eight-and-forty, a bachelor, not making any merit of that renunciation, but saying, laughingly, if any one alluded to it, that he made it an excuse for many indulgences which a wife would never have allowed him. And perhaps he was the only person in the world who did not think his sisters uninteresting and superfluous; for his was one of those large-hearted, sweet-blooded natures that never know a narrow or a grudging thought—epicurean if you will—with no enthusiasm, no self-scouring sense of duty; but yet, as you have seen of a sufficiently subtle moral fibre to have an unwearied tenderness for obscure and monotonous suffering. It was his large-hearted indulgence that made him ignore his mother's hardness towards his daughters, which was the more striking from its contrast with her doting fondness toward himself; he held it no virtue to frown at irremediable faults.

See the difference between the impression a man makes on you when you walk by his side in familiar talk, or look at him in his home, and the figure he makes when seen from a lofty historical level, or even in the eyes of a critical neighbor who thinks of him as an embodied system or opinion rather than as a man.

Mr. Roe, the traveling preacher, stationed at Treddleston, had included Mr.
Irvine in a general statement concerning the church clergy in the surrounding district, whom he described as men given up to the flesh and the pride of life; hunting, and shooting, and adorning their own houses; asking what shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?—careless of dispensing the bread of life to their flocks, preaching at best but a carnal and soul numbing morality, and trafficking in the souls of men by receiving money for discharging the pastoral office in parishes where they did not so much as look on the faces of the people more than once a year.
The ecclesiastical historian, too, looking into parliamentary reports of that period find honorable members zealous for the Church, and untainted with any sympathy for the 'tribe of canting Methodists,' making statements scarcely less melancholy than that of Mr. Roe. And it is impossible for me to say Mr. Irvine was altogether believed by the generic classification assigned
