THE SHIRT COAT

Tailored with shirt details is this topper of lightweight wool. Its sleeves are neatly cuffed and miniature buttons parade up to a tiny pointed collar. Highbreasted pockets carry out the shirt look. Additional outsize patch pockets are placed low, and there is a half-belt in the back. With its trim slim lines this coat will be a good summer traveller.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Keen Wind Blows Along The Slopes Of The Valley

It was a keen wind that blew today along the slopes of our valley.

"The weather continues to be cool," a caller of this morning observed, pleased, it seemed, to come in from its breath to the fire.

"Cool for this day of May," James agreed.

"It's backward weather where the cropping is concerned," the visitor offered.

"Yes, but there has been some cultivating done, they tell me," James said.

"Pieces of potatoes planted and some turnips sowed. The ground is fairly cold for that yet I would think. But it's surprising what a few days of nice weather would do."

"And what are you farmers at these times?"

"Nothing" James grinned ruefully, "just nothing!"

"Busy," we chuckled, "but working under a cabbage-leaf!" "Not accomplishing much" James nodded.

"Perhaps you're like myself, helping a bit with the housecleaning, eh? I painted a ceiling for the wife yesterday. And," he added with a chuckle.

"I can't get my right hand above my head today."

"No, it's not the housecleaning," James replied. "But this is always our busiest time of year. Some farms have it in the cropping or the harvest. For us it comes now. Once the cattle get to the pasture, we . . . well, our busiest spell is over. Now with the chores - and there are more of these at present because of the young stock, calves and the like - and the lambs arriving, we have to keep on the move."

"I know it. It's no eight-hour day!" the visitor chuckled. "Our lambs are late this spring, though they do come in a week or so."

"It will be warmer then."

"It should be, at any rate."

We saw Alex move the kittens' shelter to a corner of the verandah away from the wind, and cover it carefully with a blanket. And his sixth birthday came, paused for observance, and went pleasantly, leaving the little lad and his family happy that with him all was well.

"I would say there's a vacancy in this one," Mack said lifting a cookie tin down from a cupboard this morning. He was on his way to school then, and had called by to tell us pieces of news: how a robin in the white birch by his window had sung "the loveliest song" just past daybreak; that the new teachers' mitt was getting "nice workouts" in the schoolyard down the River Road, these days; and to discuss whether or not we should allow that sparrow to keep on building her nest up on an eve of this house, even though they do lay "the smallest, cutest speckled eggs!"

So we baked cookies: the standbys, we as a child have enjoyed: sugar cookies lightened by the soda and cream of Tartar of that elder day. Molasses cookies to spice again this old kitchen. And the day spent away its May-hours, and in no time, eued by a frog's tune, bedded. Slipped off on silent shoes. And twilight came down from the hills.

Night is at the windows now, a May-night, "bright as day," and lovely.

Until tomorrow — — Diary—Good-night. . .

MARY HAWORTH

Mate's Effeminate Traits Require Analytic Help

Dear Mary Haworth: Jim and I have been married four years and have two small children. I am 25; he is 30.

We are planning to go overseas as missionaries, leaving in the near future. But as I am concerned about a problem delicate in nature, which I cannot discuss with him, as it would be a crushing blow to his ego.

He already has so many inferiority feelings about his failures and inadequacies, so he thinks, in his professional and social contacts. He often speaks about them to me. I have tried for years to bolster up his self - esteem but he has exhausted much of my sympathy, because there is so little foundation for his dismay, except subjectively.

He has degrees from two colleges where he made B-plus averages. He gives the impression of being intelligent and capable, which he would be if it weren't for his inferiority complex.

He has a dominant mother and a pitiful father who leans on her and would be lost without her. But I am not dominant; I need a man to lean on. Which brings me to the problem: Jim has many nervous effeminate traits that revolt me and cause me to resist his lovemaking.

When I can put aside my distaste on this score we have been very happy together. But I wonder if the problem (which has been accelerating of recent months) will worsen when we are in a strange land and even more in need of drawing strength from each other. Please advise me.

E.J.

Dear E. J.: There ought to be a responsible, effective screening system for selecting qualified candidates for evangelical work in other lands.

And if such a screening board exists, competent to render accurate judgments, I am pretty sure it would advise against you and Jim going abroad as a missionary team in your present queasy emotional state.

It is to your credit, however, evidence of your intrinsic honesty and common sense, that you dare to take the mask off your feelings at this 11th hour, and grapple with the possibility that your rickety marriage might collapse under the stresses and strains of a foreign assignment.

As you write from a mid-western city where excellent psychiatric services abound, I advise you to get first-hand specialist help of that sort, in seeing what can be done for your marriage — or for Jim's neurotic bias.

In view of his chronic inferiority complex and lopsided parentage (with his mother wearing the pants in the family), it may be that Jim's missionary undertaking is related no so much to sterling apostolic gifts as to an unconscious desire to somehow escape, entirely, the surroundings he has always known.

Unconsciously he may assume that if settled overseas, in a brand-new role in the host community, he would become automatically a different and happier man, joyously freed from the whole weight of past personal history that insidiously cripples his self - esteem.

If such is the unconscious rationale of his address to the missionary field, he ought to postpone his take-off until he has marshalled his motives and studied them closely, with analytic help, to determine if he is moving in the right direction, or maybe going from bad to worse.

Meanwhile, don't wait on him to initiate this prudent self-inventory. Get busy on your own, with analytic help, to double-check whether you can continue to follow his lead blindly, without cracking - up.
