LOSING TO WIN.

A Story of Honor and Love.

BY A. MAYNARD BARBOUR.

On this particular evening Jim returned quite late from Silverton, and, tossing a roll of bills to his partner, remarked:—

"There, Jack, there's your share in the Blue-Eyed Nellie; I sold her to-day for a good little lump sum, spot cash; and if I can get that deal through next week on the Gold Coin, there'll be another good thing for us."

"What's the prospect for a trade on that property, Jim?" inquired the other.

"Pretty good," answered Jim; "Hoyt and Johnson are going to send two of their experts, as they call 'em, up to examine it next week. One of 'em looks as if he knew as about much of mining as I'd know about tuning a pianer; the other looks like he had a little sense, though, and I think that in the morning I'll put in an extra blast or two, and we'll have it show up in good shape next week."

"Well, Jim," said his companion, quietly, "I'll be at work on the May Queen next week, but we'll get the Gold Goin ready for inspection this week, and the sooner we get the money out of that property the better it will suit me."

"Yes," said Jim, "and then, when you get a good lot of dust, I suppose you'll skip out and leave me. Well, that's about the way of it out here. I reckon there's none of us is out here for our health, and there's precious few of us is known by the name our mothers gave us."

"What do you mean by that, Jim?" asked the other.

"What I mean, old boy, is that I don't suppose your name is Jack any more than my name is Jim. You needn't think I don't understand your always makin' yourself scarce when there's city folks up here; I've lived here too long. I've heard of 'silent' partners, and I guess you're one. But it's all right; I'll always stand by you, Jack, to the last nickel."

"I know that, Jim," said the other, rising hastily and going to a little iron chest, in which he deposited the roll of bills, and from which he took a large letter, sealed and addressed; this he handed to Jim, saying:—

"As a proof of my trust in you and your friendship, I give you this to keep as long as I am with you, and if anything should happen to me, mail that letter, and send my money by New York draft to the same person, and also the amount of my interest in these properties, as fast as they are sold, whatever that may be."

"All right, old boy," said Jim, putting the letter in his pocket; "I'll do it; you may be sure if anything happens to you, I'll do as you say; but I hope you'll never need me to attend to your business for you."

Early the next morning Jim was at the mine, putting in the "extra blast," as he called it, and then came back to the cabin to have breakfast, while the smoke and gases cleared away.

After breakfast Jim and his pardner went as usual to the mine, and began work. They had been there about an hour when Jim noticed that a wall of rock on one side seemed to have been loosened by the blasting, and threatened to cave in. Giving his friend warning he went up on higher ground near the wall to examine it. Suddenly a few loose rocks on the lower edge began sliding. "Jump, Jack, she's coming!" he shouted, at the same time springing aside himself. Both men jumped simultaneously, but Jim was on higher ground and had the advantage; he escaped with a few scratches, but his partner lay unconscious, half buried in the mass of rocks. As quickly as possible Jim drew him out and away from that part of the mine, as he knew a second slide was likely to follow. In a few seconds it came, and several tons of rock were piled upon the spot where his companion had lain fifty seconds before. Jim now bent over him, trying to ascertain the extent of his injuries. His left side was crushed, and his head badly bruised. As Jim bathed his head with water, he partially revived, and murmured: "It will soon be all over with me, Jim; remember that letter," and then, with a groan, he fainted. With great difficulty, Jim brought him to the surface, and, carrying him to the cabin, bandaged his wounds as best he could; then, hiding the little iron chest in a small, secret cupboard made in the side of the mountain, he wrapped his companion in a blanket, and, taking him in his arms, started down the trail for the nearest cabin, about three miles distant. At times the wounded man would regain consciousness for a few moments; then would relapse into a sort of stupor, sometimes muttering incoherently. It was nearly noon when Jim reached the cabin. Here he found three or four miners, and among them they hastily improvised a stretcher, which they made as comfortable as possible, with canvas stretched across to protect the sick man from the heat; and thus they carried him to Silverton.

There he was speedily taken to one of the hospitals; one more added to that pathetic list—of which there are so many in Western mining towns—of unfortunates who suffer and die unrecognized, unloved, uncared for except by strangers, often even their names unknown.

* * * * *

Three years had passed since Marion Bainbridge came to Silverton. She had chosen this place because it was near an extensive group of mines, and as her father, in years past, had been interested in some of these mines, she thought he would be most likely to come here now. As the newspapers were full of detailed accounts of her father's flight, and also of her generous sacrifice of her property, not wishing to be identified with the affair, and also believing she might thereby help her father the more easily could she find him, Marion took her mother's name, and was known as Miss Vaughn. From her pastor at Irvington she had brought a letter of introduction to one of the pastors of Silverton, a Mr. Elliott, who happened to be an old colleague of his. Mr. Elliott, knowing her history, had introduced her to some of his friends, and through their assistance she had been very successful in supporting herself in this Western city. She had at first, through their influence, secured a position as amanuensis of a literary man, a correspondent for several papers and magazines, and who was then engaged in writing a book, who became one of her best friends. There is a sort of contagion in work of this kind. Through helping Mr. Reed in his articles, Marion was seized with an ambition to become a writer herself, and through the recommendation of Mr. Reed, secured a place as regular correspondent for two or three papers. She had also a fine voice, and through the influence of Mr. Elliott, became a member of the choir in St. Paul's church of which he was rector; so that at the end of three years she was very comfortably and pleasantly situated in her Western home. She occasionally heard from her old home through her former pastor, who enclosed letters to her when writing Mr. Elliott. She knew that Riverside had been purchased by Mr. Templeton, one of the wealthiest men of Irvington, but who was fast losing his money through recklessness and extravagance. She had also heard that Raymond Denison had succeeded in the West far beyond his expectations, and had been promoted by the railroad company from the position of superintendent of construction to that of general manager of one of its divisions. But the great purpose for which Marion had come West was still unaccomplished. She had obtained no clue regarding her father, though she still felt by a sort of intuition, as though she were nearer to him here than she would be elsewhere, and she had a dim presentiment that somehow, somewhere, they would yet meet. Being a musician, her name was often published in connection with musicales and entertainments in different parts of the city, and knowing that he would recognize the name and understand her motive in taking it, she hoped in that way to find him. On Sundays, after the church services of the morning were over, she frequently devoted much of her time to the sick and suffering; sometimes in the wretched homes of the poor, but oftener in the hospitals, especially those conducted by the Sisters of Charity. With her soft, black garments, her sweet face and gentle voice, she seemed like one of the sisters themselves, as she glided from one sick bed to another, with eyes so sympathetic and tender, and smile so sunny and winning, that one little crippled boy said: "When Miss Vaughn smiles, it always makes me think of the sun shining through the raindrops."

One Sunday afternoon Marion was passing through the wards as usual, her cheering words and gentle touch bringing light and happiness to many weary faces, worn with pain and suffering. It was early in May, and she carried a basket of wild flowers, and upon each pillow left a bunch of the delicate, starry-eyed blossoms.

Upon a bed in one corner, darkened and shut off from the others by a screen, was a new patient. Stepping behind the screen to speak to the sister sitting there, Marion saw a man past middle-age, his head bandaged, his face partially concealed by the pillow, moaning in pain and delirium. With a glance of inquiry, she turned to the sister, who replied in a low tone: "A man brought in last evening from the mines. The mine caved in on him and crushed him. The doctor says he cannot live more than twenty-four hours."

Marion looked back at the sufferer with a glance of pity; at that moment he turned his head, bringing his face into view. Marion started and stepped quickly to the bedside. Could it be? Could that face, pinched with pain and gray with the shadow of approaching death, be the face she loved, for which she had been searching so long? The features were the same, only so changed by suffering and sorrow; there was the raven-black hair, but streaked with gray until it scarcely seemed the same. In his delirium the sufferer opened his eyes, looking Marion full in the face; some glimmer of recognition must have reached those darkened chambers of the brain, for he smiled, then closed his eyes with a moan. It was enough! The face irradiated by that smile was her father's. With quivering lips Marion turned to the sister:—

"His name?" she whispered.

"Jack Morton, is all that we know," the sister replied.

Jack Morton! John Morton Bainbridge! With tears of joy and sorrow commingled, Marion knelt beside the bed, breathing a prayer of gratitude that she had found her father before it was too late. Then beckoning to the sister, she requested that Mr. Elliott and also the priest might be sent for immediately, as she wished to see them together. When they arrived Marion was still kneeling by the bedside, her father's hand clasped in hers, and he lay sleeping quietly, his moans having ceased. Mr. Elliott understood all, and at Marion's request told Father Matthews the story of her life. The eyes of the kind old priest filled with tears, as he listened to the sad recital, and gazed at the sequel before him, and he very readily granted the desired permission that she might remain with him while he lived. Soon after the sick man was skilfully and tenderly moved into one of the private rooms. The physicians pronounced him to be slowly sinking. "His strength is failing; at the longest he cannot live twenty-four hours; but the delirium is passing away, and his mind will probably clear."

Toward midnight, Marion, sitting by the bedside in the dimly-lighted room, heard her name spoken in a whisper. Bending over her father, she saw him smiling faintly in his sleep. A few moments later he awoke; his eyes rested on her with wondering surprise, and then an expression of deep joy stole over his face.

"Marion, my child," he whispered, feebly, "I thought it was all a dream; are you really here?"

For answer she knelt beside him, kissing him tenderly, and drawing his head upon her breast. He tried to talk, but was too weak. With loving words and tender caresses she soothed him, and soon he slept again.

HOW THEY FOOLED THE VOTERS.

(Toronto Mail and Empire.)

Mr. Laurier's paper in Quebec, l'Electeur, made the following announcement on the eve of the election: "Let this fact be well remarked: All the Liberal candidates have pledged themselves in writing to vote in favor of a Remedial bill such as is demanded by our bishops. No conservative candidate has yet taken this solemn engagement." What do the people of Ontario think of a party which thus appeals to the Catholics in Quebec while it arouses as it did Protestant feeling in Ontario on directly opposite grounds? It proves, in spite of the warnings that have been given in these columns, that hundreds of thousands of electors have been duped and done out of their votes by fraud.

Tore His Flesh in Agony

"I was troubled with blind itching piles for 20 years; was unable to work and tore my flesh in agony. United States' and Canadian doctors failed to relive. Chase's Ointment was a God-send. I am a better man than in 20 years, and am able to work every day." Philip Wallace, blacksmith, Iroquois, Ont. Chase's Ointment cures piles, eczema and irritant diseases. All druggists, 60c. per box.

Japan's population at the close of 1894 was 42,000,000, to which must be added the 3,000,000 in Formosa. That puts her sixth in the list of countries according to population, China, India, Russia, the United States and Germany surpassing her.

THE ONLY HELP.

A Victim of Bright's Disease for Many Years—Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

NEEPAWA (Special) June 29.—Mrs. T. H McKee formerly of Listewel, came here as a last resort. Had suffered ten years with Bright's disease. Reported to be past help and dying, her reappearance on the street in apparent good health, was a pleasant surprise. The explanation given was that her little boy had insisted that she should use Dodd's Kidney Pills and prophesied that they would cure her. She says:—"From the first few doses I began to feel better, and after taking four and a half boxes, I say it with heart felt gratitude, I am perfectly cured" Dodd's Kidney Pills is the only medicine in the world that has ever cured a case of Bright's Disease at such a stage.

Bad Blood Between Them

The ever-slaving farmers' wife, her delicate sister in the city, suffer more than they care to tell. The dark rings round the eyes, headaches, dizziness, palpitation or rheumatic twinges, betoken a run-down system. The blood is poor, and is a bar to enjoyment of life. Scott's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, strengthens and vitalizes the system, and speedily restores the bloom of youth to the cheeks. It cures when all others fail.

A Forty-Year Old Grievance Removed

In Bath, Ont., Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are a standard remedy. Joseph Gardner, of this town, suffered for 30 years with indigestion and its ever-present accompaniments—constipation and headache. K. & L. Pills are the only remedy that gave him relief. 25c. a box, of all druggists. One pill a dose.

The Natal contingent has defeated, with heavy loss, a force of two thousand Mashonas.

In Reply to Oft-Repeated Questions.

It may be well to state, Scott's Emulsion acts as a food as well as a medicine, building up the wasted tissues and restoring perfect health after wasting fever.

NOT A PHILANTHROPIST.

Gave a $200 New Floor for a $500 Old One.

It is not very often that such a seemingly philanthropic offer is made by one business man to another as that told of by a partner in an old bullion house to a Mail and Express reporter.

"Not long ago," he said, "a dealer in gold and silver heard that one floor of a building which had not been occupied for some time was to be rented, but that the prospective tenant had insisted that a new floor be laid before he take possession, as the old one had become very much worn. The bullion dealer knew that the previous occupant had been a manufacturer of jewelry and had been in business in the place for many years. He promptly visited the owner of the property and told him that he would put in a new floor of the best wood for nothing. The owner made a few inquiries, but the dealer said very little in reply, except that he thought he would manage to scrape a good deal of gold and silver dust from off the floor. His offer was accepted The wood for the new floor and the labor for laying it cost about $200.

"The old flooring was burned and the ashes put through a course of reduction. The result was that the bullion dealer obtained nearly $500 for the gold and silver which was brought out, or a profit of about 100 per cent. on the operation.

"Every manufacturer of jewelry or worker in the precious metals calculates that he will lose about $800 in 'saturating' new quarters of the usual loft size. The gold and silver dust penetrates the pores of the wood and small particles are ground into the floor. After just so much is lost in this way the waste ceases and all dust that falls to the floor or adheres to the wall may be swept up or off and saved. The sweepings in these factories and in bullion offices are always saved and reduced."—New York Mail and Express.

An Accidental Banana Party.

Recently the ladies connected with one of the local churches at Knoxville became imbued with the idea that they ought to hold a small church supper. Accordingly twenty-seven of their number were appointed a committee to have everything in readiness at the appointed time. This committee of twenty-seven decided that each member of the committee should bring something for the supper. The appointed evening arrived at last. The table had been set, the snowy linen, sparkling glassware, china, dishes and handsome silverware placed in position, and it was in readiness to be loaded down with the good things that were to be dispensed during the evening. However, when the baskets and bundles, brought by the different ladies, were opened, it was found that twenty-four out of the twenty-seven had brought bananas, another a large banana cake, another some small cakes shaped like bananas, and which she called banana cakes, while the other brought some oranges. There was much consternation for awhile, but happily some one suggested that the oranges be put away and the affair turned into a banana party, which was was accordingly done.
