TIMELY NOTES ON TOPICS CONNECTED WITH Silver Fox And Mink Farming

In the October 13 issue of Women's Wear Daily, New York, there is a half page write-up headed "They Are Wearing a Flurry of Little Fur Fashions," and models are adorned with a black fox stole and muff, blue fox shoulder cape, Russian broadtail, pastel mink and civet cat neckpiece with the following: "Black fox loomed as the most popular of all long-haired furs shaped into streaming boas and toles often paired with matching muffs. Favored as an accent over black as well as color it was widely represented everywhere and worn over slim as well as full skirted outfits. Little fur fashions are current favorite with fashionable New Yorkers as evidenced by the big showing they made last week all along upper Fifth Avenue. A succession of crisp, cool days brought them out in numbers to lend a luxury note to fall suits and dresses in tweeds or solid colors, shopping or at matinees. New furs appeared in the scene along with the ever popular mink to add greater variety to the style picture. Norwegian blue fox stood out significantly among the many fashions chosen by smart women of all ages to wear over suits as well as dresses."
The above is one of a number of signs that are appearing of more interest being taken in silver fox. On the Continent mutation fox is being worn probably because of it being a favorite with Queen Elizabeth. Anyhow, there are definite symptoms of more interest than has been noticed for many months in fox. The black fox of course is dyed red fox and there are many thousands of them held in storage in New York and other cities. That is the trouble with the whole fox picture we believe. The great numbers of carry-over skins which no doubt deteriorated by being kept in cold storage will when released, be the problem facing the comeback of foxes now being featured.

rancher to peddle his junk pelts for a dollar or two, which about equals the cost of pelting, fleshing and shipping, so it must be just plain thoughtlessness. The rancher who sells his junk pelts instead of destroying them simply has not taken the time to think the thing through. Every time he puts junk pelts on the market he is injuring the high prestige of mink. He is helping to undermine his industry and he is competing against himself. But the rancher might say, what difference can 75,000 or even 100,000 casualty pelts make against the annual crop of three million? Well, a lot of folks still think low grade pelts started silver fox on the skids. When high quality and exclusiveness left the silver fox so did the customers. No rancher wants to take chances on this happening to mink for the sake of a few dollars. You will be helping yourself and your industry when you destroy such pelts."
The above, written by Doc Collins, is true and all our fox ranchers made a mistake in not destroying our low grade silver foxes. No doubt they caused a cheapening of the article and hastened its downfall. Mink ranchers are being warned in time. The power of Doc Collins will reach a great many of them, particularly the larger ranchers in the U.S.A. Our Maritimers would certainly do well to heed his warning too.

A general sale including mink is now on at Canadian Fur Auction Sales Company (Quebec) Ltd., Montreal, and will run to October 29. A million dollars worth of mink, considered one of the largest collections ever gathered under one retail roof, was shown in exhibition and offered for sale at Russack's Fifth Avenue beginning last Monday. The event will continue until tonight and will take a pioneering form, according to Harold Russack, executive vice president, in that "price will be given secondary consideration. The main purpose of the presentation is to place the focus on the beauty, glamour, variety and prestige of mink. While we believe our prices will be so attractive as to compete favorably with wholesale prices we do not intend to use a sales pitch in this undertaking."
The event he said, was about three months in preparation. The main floor of the store will be devoted to mink of every type and style, wild and ranch standard mink, and every mutation except jasmine, will be included. "We hope, frankly, to overpower the public with this abundance of beautiful furs." All front windows will feature mink during the week and special sessions have been held for sales personnel to explain their role during the exhibition. They have been briefed on all phases of mink, the history of the trade, the development, the quality and of the merchandise and all other factors that will tend to enhance mink in a prestige way. The all time mink effort, he stated, will include goods from our wholesale business, our complete sample supply and items from some of our most valued and most fashionable sources. A single page ad will appear in Sunday's New York Times introducing the mink spectacle and other ads will be spotted through the week in the Times as well as other New York Papers. A number of fashion writers and editors from leading magazines and newspapers have been invited to examine the styles offered at the exhibition. A feature of the event will be the increased use of live models who will be used to show some of the items the store feels deserve special attention.
