

"Why Some Succeed"

The shrewd advertiser is the one who knows how, when and where to advertise. The merchants who advertise in THE EXAMINER are not the men to make mistakes, as you can see for yourself. But you may get the benefit of their experience by watching how, when and where they advertise. In some papers pay advertisers, some do not. Only a few pay, and their can be picked out by the large amount of advertising they do.

THE WEEKLY EXAMINER
is issued every Friday morning. It is made up of matter which has appeared in the Daily Examiner, and is a first-class weekly newspaper containing all the latest news.

THAT FOLDING BED.

The Old Farmer Did Not Avail Himself of Its Soothing Attractions.

An old, gray-whiskered man, who had lived all his life on a small farm near Batavia, stopped at the hotel last Tuesday evening. He said he wanted a room for one night. He was sent to the third floor. Later in the evening he went out and didn't come back till midnight. He had evidently been enjoying himself. His head ached with the whisky. He went up to his room and that was the last seen of him until early in the morning when a boy went to call him for his train. The boy got no answer when he knocked on the door and he opened it and walked into the room. The folding bed had not been let down. The boy had to look about for a moment or two before he discovered the old man. Then he heard a husky voice from near the ceiling somewhere. He looked up and there was the guest curled up on top of the bed, rubbing his eyes. He was fully dressed, with the exception of his big cowhide boots, which were standing on the floor.

"Say, mister," inquired the boy, "why didn't you get into bed?"

"B'gosh!" shouted the man, angrily, "there ain't no bed. Here I've been curled up on top of the sidewalk all night without a wink of sleep. Ain't this a nice way to treat a man? Hey!"

She Didn't Sail.

A Liverpool lady had an unpleasant experience lately. She was about to sail by one of the Atlantic liners for New York, and she left one trunk to be packed for the morning of her start. They called for it about 6 A. M. She protested, but the men declared it was her last chance to get it on the steamer. The poor little woman was half blind with sleep. She got up and flung the things into the trunk—towels, tidies, books, anything that came to hand. Then she sat on the trunk, got it locked, popped into bed and was fast asleep before they got it out of the room.

In due time she awoke with just an hour or so to get her bath and breakfast and get down to the wharf, and then she found that she hadn't a solitary stitch to her back but the men declared it was her last chance to get it on the steamer. The poor little woman was half blind with sleep. She got up and flung the things into the trunk—towels, tidies, books, anything that came to hand. Then she sat on the trunk, got it locked, popped into bed and was fast asleep before they got it out of the room.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

Ayut training college, Egypt, needs funds for the erection of larger buildings.

The property of the Salvation Army in the United States is valued at nearly $5,000,000.

The degree of doctor of divinity was last year conferred on 355 persons in the United States.

The cause of foreign missions has lagged the past year because of hard times. This is the report of every denomination.

English bishops receive from $2,500 to $10,000 and each is provided with a palace in which to reside. There are said to be considerable perquisites attached to the office.

Traveling churches are to be established on the trans-Siberian railway, which passes through many desert tracts, where neither village nor church can be met with for miles.

Iowa appears to have churches enough to meet all demands upon them. With a seating capacity of 1,503,504, they are a membership of only 571,364. Methodists are most numerous in the state. Next come the Roman Catholics, the Lutherans and the Presbyterians.

On the island of Madagascar there are 32,972 Lutheran Christians and 485 congregations. These are cared for by twenty-three Norwegian missionaries and fifty six native helpers. Thirty-four thousand four hundred and thirty-seven children attend the 485 schools.

THE BANK COUNTER.

Who For Once Was Firm With The Haughty Receiving Teller.

He had small brown eyes and a bristling red mustache. His cheek bones were prominent and his temples formed little hollows on the sides of his head, against which the intricate workings of the brain pulsated fiercely. Moreover, he was receiving teller in a Chestnut Street bank.

In his position, where he handled sums of money ranging in value from thousands of dollars to as many cents he had ample opportunity to bestow his personal favors upon whatever patrons of the bank were most deserving and to literally wipe less fortunate depositors out of existence with one scornful look of his deep-set eyes. It was only one time, however, that he had ever been prompted by the force of his nature to seize such a chance by the forelock and work it to his complete satisfaction.

Of all the lesser lights in the commercial world that transacted business through the medium of the receiving teller's bank there was one firm which he had singled out as a special mark for his aversion. It was a recently organized concern that had started out with a very modest capital, and the first time the woman who had been employed as a mail-order clerk around the office went over to the banking house to make a deposit she carried three checks amounting to $17.25. The receiving teller noted the smallness of the sum and his brown eyes sunk a little further back in his head, his eyesight becoming a little more than usual. When he returned the bank book he threw it down before her with a little whack that gave her to understand without any pretence of quibbling that he had given her check of war to the end.

The business of the new firm dragged miserably along in the very lowest stratum and for months the ability to deposit more than $100 made a red-letter day in their history. Week after week the receiving teller grew more suspicious of the woman who qualified visibly before her deep contempt in his dark eyes and bristling mustache, and at last he reached the point where he doubted what little money she did have was gotten honestly. A check given by a firm in the city had to be certified before he would have anything to do with it; if it came from another town it was considered worthless until he had communicated with the issuing bank, and he gave orders to the paying teller to cash no order she might present without consulting him.

The woman's soul grew faint and sick from poverty and her dreams were haunted by a pair of deep-set eyes, a bristling red mustache, and piles of spurious checks. One day a streak of good luck blew up hard against the new firm and the woman's step was light and her heart was exultant with victory when she marched up to the receiving teller's window. She had a check for $50. He looked at it once carelessly and said in that piercing tone which was insignia of his displeasure: "You must get that certified."

The woman was strong in the knowledge that she was backed up by a $500 check and she decided to take a firm stand.

"That is good," she said, resolutely. "It is now 11:30. I will take an hour to get it certified. We have to make $100 good here with a pair of deep-set eyes and a bristling red mustache. Please credit us with that amount."

The receiving teller's face flushed at her defiance, and he watched her as she started away. She stopped at the paying teller's window. He tapped on the wire netting separating the two compartments and called out loudly: "Cash nothing. This check cannot be drawn against."

The woman's eyes blazed and she stalked back to his desk.

"Sir," she said, "do you see whose name is signed on this check? It is my name. I have straightened up tonight. I don't know the name," he said sharply. "It is some one we have never heard of."

"Please look at it again," she returned. Reluctantly he took it from the spindle and studied the signature.

"Will it be all right?" she asked softly.

He nodded. The name was that of the president of the bank.

Jetty.

One hot day when Jetty was a little kitten, his mistress found him sitting in a washbowl of water which some one had carelessly left standing.

He seemed to enjoy his cold bath so much that he wanted to go back to it after his mistress had lifted him out.

But the queerest thing that Jetty does is to bathe his feet. A wooden moppal always stands in a certain place, partly filled with water to prevent it from going to pieces.

Every day Jetty goes to this pail, balances himself on the edge of it, dips one paw into the water, till it is thoroughly wet, and then licks it dry. He does the same with the other paw, then, turning around and resting his paws on the edge, he bathes his hind feet in the same way.

Now, this is a true story; and as you know that nearly all cats dislike water, and will not wet their feet if they can avoid it, you can judge that Jetty is a very remarkable cat.—Youth's Companion.

Circumstances.

"Who is happier?" asked a young man of a father, "a millionaire or a man who has seven daughters?"

"The man who has seven daughters."

"Why so?"

"He who has a million wishes for more; the man who has seven daughters does not."
