EFFECTS OF THE CONFERENCE.

One clever contemporary sees in the Imperial Unity movement— which has been distinctly promoted and advanced by the Intercolonial Conference at Ottawa, which was a result of the good offices of the Dominion Government—a means by which the administration of Sir John Thompson may make some political capital and the grand object of the grays may be frustrated. We feel sure that Sir John Thompson and Hon. Messrs. Bowell and Foster never thought of such a thing as political capital when they proposed a conference of British and Colonial delegates. Their motive was the good of Canada and the unity and prosperity of the Empire at large. At the same time it may be true that the Patriot has good grounds for its opinion that one of the incidental effects of the conference will be the raising of the Canadian Government in the estimation of all patriotic British-Canadian men and women. Everyone must see that the strengthening of the ties which bind the colonies to each other, and all to our beloved mother country, will be a good thing for the Empire at large and for Canada in particular. Everyone must see, too, that more intimate and friendly trade relations between the Colonies and Great Britain will result in irreparable disaster to the pet of Sir Richard Cartwright and his followers. Those who prefer that the destinies of Canada shall be linked with those of the United States do well to take alarm at the resolution passed by the Intercolonial Conference at Ottawa. We cannot enlarge our trade with the Colonies and the mother country and stand shoulder to shoulder with the British people of Australasia, Africa, India, etc., and be dependent upon the great Republic. The desire of the grays cannot be gratified if Imperial Unity be consummated until the mother country and the Colonies will stand and will be free, subject only to beneficial British institutions. But divided—well it is possible that the Farmers and Wilmans and Cartwrights may even yet be successful. The Patriot's depreciation and misrepresentation of the Intercolonial Conference is consequently just that which was to be expected, and its fear that the Government will gain strength as an effect of the conference is well founded. The tone of the Patriot concerning the result of the conference is, however, in marked contrast with that of the great organs of British opinion throughout the world. For example, the Times says:—"The work done at Ottawa is the most important and expression of the evolution of opinion which has been going on for a quarter of a century and now reached a stage at which it must be recognized as a powerful factor in determining the policy of the Empire. It has affirmed the unity of the Empire, not as a mere abstract continent depending upon vaguely conceived ties of blood, but as the basis of the practical assertion of an economic principle and political right while firmly grasping and expressing the principle of Imperial unity and the main corollary of unity among the colonies themselves, the colonial delegates have shown most admirable reticence and restraint in dealing with practical application." "The Morning Post, of London, says:—"The real results of the Colonial conference in Ottawa have been to cement more firmly than ever the bonds of affinity between the colonies and the mother country and make it clear that the aim and object of the colonies is to be considered a part of the united empire, and that, once again, all the sham and unpatriotic theories of separatists. The Post also expresses the opinion that the Imperial authority should insure the expense of surveying the Pacific cable route, but regards the total cost as more likely to be £60,000 than £30,000. The Post supports the resolution advising that trade relations between the colonies and the mother country be put on a more favorable footing than the former, and foreign countries. It is pleading, the Post adds, to see the colonies waking to the fact that the Empire is a solid unity. It should not be very difficult to amend the commercial treaties with Belgium and Germany as to remove all obstacles. Space does not allow us to deal with the minor questions discussed, but it cannot be doubted that the work undertaken has been done well and cannot fail to bear good fruit. The London Standard remarks upon "the dignified character of the deliberations of the Ottawa conference and the warm loyalty to the Mother Country shown throughout the proceedings." Regarding the cable and steamship subvention, the Standard expresses the opinion that "Great Britain will not be backward in meeting the colonies' views. The other resolutions of the conference," it says, "present more difficulty. If the colonies were allowed to raise a special tariff against foreign countries, the latter would retaliate against England until finally our export trade would be almost solely confined to our dependencies, which would be ruinous to us." The Standard, suggests a difficulty which is, in our opinion, not likely to arise. It is very much more probable that, in the event of discriminating tariffs in favour of the Mother Country and the colonies, that the United States and other countries will sue for better terms, in consideration of which they will be ready to accord much greater freedom of trade to British countries than is now enjoyed. At any rate, it is hard to see how the tariffs of foreign countries can be made much more hostile to British and Colonial trade than they are at present. However this may be, the spirit of that of the narrow views of the Patriot, which can see among the effects of the Intercolonial conference only a new lease of power for Sir John Thompson and death to the grays.

It is important to keep the liver and kidneys in good condition. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the remedy for invigorating these organs. Pendergast the assassin of Mayor Harrison, who was executed a few days ago, was an ardent and enthusiastic advocate of the single tax theory.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

CONSUMPTION.

Sir,—I notice in your paper of Saturday an editorial on "Consumption." In that article two important propositions are laid down, viz., that consumption is hereditary, and that it is not hereditary—that is, in regard to the latter, it is not inborn, and is not transmissible from parent to offspring. Now, in regard to the hereditary nature of consumption, everyone admits that your statement is true for the most part; but that it is invariably true, is open to grave doubt. The hereditary nature of consumption, according to the best means of observation, a cure has been effected; and he has seen not a few cases of post-mortem examinations of lungs of patients who died from other causes, under the supervision of the ablest pathologist of the day, who pronounced certain phenomena in the lungs as indicating the former existence of tubercular deposit. In regard to the second of your propositions viz.—that consumption is not transmissible from parent to offspring but only a constitutional non-specific weakness is transmissible. I take the liberty of saying that I believe your proposition to be incorrect. Reus whom you have quoted is undoubtedly a high authority, but he is only one of many high and higher authority than he. Without giving the names, I give you other causes, under the supervision of the very cream of the profession. "The tendency to the formation of tubercle resides in the constitution of the individual and that this tendency may be either hereditary or acquired, or both." "The influence of heredity as a cause of consumption cannot be doubted." I have called the propagation of your erroneous doctrine an error. This is the reason. If it be true that consumption is hereditary, then the permission of marriage between people of consumptive tendencies is wrong. Whatever practice in society tends to the public loss and injury, should be prohibited by law, even at the expense of considerable personal inconvenience or even loss. Intermarriages between people of consumptive tendencies should be discouraged in every possible way by society, and no doubt, provided the correct doctrine be maintained, will in time be prohibited by law. "That a strong feeling already in that direction is true," you admit. "That consumptive parents may transmit a constitutional debility which furnishes a favorable breeding ground for the tubercular bacilli," still furnishes some reason for the discouragement of intermarriages among consumptive people, yet the denial of the doctrine of heredity deprives the argument of three-fourths of its strength.

REV. W. W. BREWER'S SERMON.

The First Methodist Church was crowded last evening, not only the ordinary congregation being present, but a large number of persons of other denominations. It was known that this was the last service in the church at which the retiring pastor, the Rev. W. W. Brewer, would officiate before his removal to Moncton. The Rev. gentleman's voice and manner were more than usually quiet and subdued, and although he retained perfect control throughout the service, it was quite evident that the occasion was a trying one to him. He chose for his text Phil. 1, 6-10, and preached a very appropriate sermon. At the close he thanked the leader and members of the choir, the official boards of the church, the members and the congregation for their kindness and good will to him. He also referred in fitting terms to the courtesy and Christian feeling uniformly exhibited by all the clergymen and people of the city, both Protestant and Catholic, in his intercourse with them. When the congregation was retiring, the choir, under the direction of Mr. Eastwood, sang, "God be With you till We Meet Again."

CRICKET AT THE PARK.

A friendly game of cricket was played in Victoria Park, on Saturday afternoon, between the officers of H. M. S. Canada and a team from the Phoenix Club. Although the match was to have begun at 1 o'clock, it was not until after two of the last of the home team appeared. The officers went first to bat, but, under the effective bowling of McQuillan, were soon disposed of for 27 runs. The Phoenix team scored the large total of 106, to which Major Longworth contributed 50 and Capt. Moore 27 runs. In the second innings the officers scored 40 runs, thus leaving the home team victorious by an innings and 39 runs. The game was witnessed by a large number of people. Following are the respective scores:

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Miss Wilcox and Mr. Shelmerdine Drowned While Bathing—One Body Recovered.

On Saturday, about eleven o'clock, three young people, Miss Julia Wilcox, Miss Annie E. Hills and Mr. Charles C. Shelmerdine, guest at Altona some time, Brackley Point, went in surf bathing. Miss Hills was the only one who came out alive. It appears that after they had been in the water some time, Miss Wilcox apparently lost her presence of mind, and Miss Hills told her to throw herself on her back and float, she doing the same thing herself, neither being able to swim. Mr. Shelmerdine, who was able to swim, did what he could to keep the two ladies afloat. After some time spent in this way, Miss Hills noticing that young Shelmerdine's face was getting blue, and he appeared to be taking a chill, asked him to leave them and make for the shore. Whether or not he attempted this is not known. Miss Hill could not say, as she was lying in such a position that she could not see him all the time. Her impression is that he almost immediately became exhausted and was drowned. During their struggle they drifted about a mile or more in an easterly direction, Miss Hill paddling with one hand whilst she supported her friend with the other. The arm with which she was paddling becoming tired, gradually sank in the water, and after some time she found they were in shallow water, her hand having touched the sand. She immediately stood up, and seeing parties on the shore called for assistance. Mr. E. H. Bess, who was in the boat, of this city, being on the shore, having just finished dressing himself after bathing, immediately ran to the shore, and he and his party, after a fruitless search for some time, found they were in shallow water, her hand having touched the sand. She immediately stood up, and seeing parties on the shore called for assistance. Mr. E. H. DISGRACEFUL SCENE.

A most disgraceful scene took place on the wharf at Brackley Point, on Saturday evening, the participants in which should certainly be made to feel the power of the law. A number of young fellows ranging in age from 20 to 25 years, stripped themselves nude as a load of ladies was coming along, and as the boat got in close to the wharf they dived in and followed the boat some distance.
