Chagall's Night at Orgeval.

"My Land"

Marc Chagall

Only that land is mine
That lies in my soul.
As a native, with no documents,
I enter that land.

It sees my sorrow
And loneliness,
Puts me to sleep
And covers me with a fragrance-stone.

Gardens are blooming inside me,
My flowers I invented,
My own streets--
But there are no houses.
They have been destroyed since my childhood.
Their inhabitants stray in the air,
Seek a dwelling,
They live in my soul.

That's why I smile sometimes
When the sun barely glimmers,
Or I cry
Like a light rain at night.

There was a time
When I had two heads,
When both faces were covered with a film of love--
And evaporated like the scent of roses.

Now I imagine
That even when I walk back
I walk forward--
Toward high gates,
Beyond them, walls are strewn about,
Where worn-out thunders sleep,
And broken lightning-----
