

Beecher on Distilleries.

In the early days of his ministry in Indiana Henry Ward Beecher made war upon the distilleries then numerous in that State.

While you sleep, some miserable wretch reels under the influence of the liquor made by you. While every morning, around the family altar, you breathe a Christian's thanksgiving, and utter a supplicant's prayer, your whiskey is busily at work opening hundreds of mouths with bitter curses.

At the time this scathing open letter was addressed to Mr. Comegys, he was probably the richest man in Lawrenceburg. But on the first day of the next January the flood swept away all his property but his distillery, and a few days after the flames wiped out the latter, leaving him a bankrupt.
