SURNAMES IN IRELAND.
Among other things shown by a parliamentary report on surnames in Ireland is that Murphy is the commonest, there being no fewer than 62,000 persons (or 13.5 per 1,000 of the population) so called, and the next in order of numerical strength are Kelly (55,900), Sullivan (43,500), Walsh (37,700), Smyth (33,700), O'Brien (33,400), and Byrne (33,500).

As to the derivation of surnames, there are examples like the following: MacFadden, derived from MacFadden (Irish), son of little Patrick; O'Toole, from O'Tanahill, the descendant of Tannahill; Killbride from Giolla Brighid, the servant of St. Bridget; Gilchrist, from Giolla Christ, the servant of Christ; McElyre, from MacElyre, the descendant of Elyre.

A PRINTERS' ILLS.
A Bradford compositor has Diabetes—He Drops 40 pounds weight in a short time—How he was cured.

BRADFORD, Oct. 15.—Thomas Hazelhurst, a compositor in the Courier office in this city, has seen some ups and downs in health within the past few months. Last spring he found himself suffering from diabetes in a very severe form. In a few weeks, he lost forty pounds in weight. His system kept on running down and Mr Hazelhurst was very naturally alarmed. After trying many remedies without benefit, he began using Dodd's Kidney Pills. Three boxes made a big change in his condition, and six bottles worked a complete cure. Mr. Hazelhurst is today better than he has been for years. All one dose of the list of diabetes cases cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Some surprising effects have been recorded from the use of Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil in the most desperate cases of consumption. Miller's Emulsion is "the kind that cures" colds, coughs, bronchitis and lung diseases generally. Every bottle warranted. No oily taste like others. In big bottles, 50c. and $1.00, at druggists.

The almost startling frankness of children often creates amusement and sometimes discomfiture.

Edith was giving a birthday party and there was some slight delay in providing seats for her little friends, when she spoke up, quite soberly:

"You see, it isn't that we have not chairs enough, but I have asked too much company."

Gents Evening Wear.
The latest fashion notes state that gents vests are provided with two pockets for handkerchiefs; this is very convenient in these days when "cold in the head" is so prevalent. But better still is to cure that disagreeable cold in the head by the use of Hawker's Catarrh cure. It is safe, sure and effective and its application pleasant and agreeable. Only 25 cents, sold by all druggists.

"The does transparent mean a cross parent?"

Have you ever stopped to think how perfectly needless it is that one out of a hundred of those who now die in early life as a result of lung troubles, should do so? If, when first threatened with weak lungs, a few bottles of PITTER'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH PANCREATIN AND HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA, were judiciously administered to the invalid, in nine cases out of ten, an early and permanent restoration to health and vigor would result.

Castoria.
"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
Dr. G. C. Orison, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup, and other harmful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
Dr. J. F. Kinchloe, Conway, Ar.

"Castoria is as well adapted to children as I recommend it as a superior remedy prescribed for them."
H. A. Anson, M. D., 111 So. Orford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

COSTLY SHOPS OF PARIS.
ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF THE DEPARTMENT STORES.

A Tour of Them Means Bankruptcy—How They are Crowding Out the Smaller Shops—Regarded by Socialists as an Indication of Government Control.

In Paris the big shops are eating up the little. The Socialists say that they are preparing the way for the great revolution when the state shall handle all capital and run every business. For in these great shops the countless employes who otherwise would be selling on their own account are directed by a central organization and receive their share of the profits at the end of the year. Until then the great shops certainly represent the use of capital pushed to its extreme. French politicians have so many branches of commerce that they extend their business operations beyond all bounds, and make life impossible to the little shops which are unable to hold out in so unequal a struggle. It is admitted that the great shops are victorious in the struggle only because they are profitable to the general public, whose interests they serve and whose taste they satisfy more completely. There is great choice offered to customers, and customers are allowed to exchange goods purchased ill-advisedly or hurriedly—a liberality which is quite outside the business idea of the small Paris tradesmen. The power of purchasing many different things under the one roof without running here and there across the city, is also a vast economy of time and money.

On their side these establishments can afford to sell cheaply, because their general expenses are so reduced by being lumped together. This has even been brought up in politics as a reason why they should be taxed more than the smaller shops, in proportion, whose proprietors are regularly forbidden by their leases to handle anything but their own special line of merchandise.

Whatever may be said of all this it is certain that the big shops have revolutionized the habits of buying and selling in France. Up to 1830 everything went by barter and there was no fixed price. Traces of this practice are still found in the small shops around Paris, where the price first asked has very little to do with what will be accepted. If you are evidently a foreigner, and especially if you are accompanied by a man who looks like a commis-monnaie or a guide or a lady of the land of France, whose sharp and hungry looks proclaim her to be on the make while showing you about, the prices charged will be higher than if you were alone. This is the Paris shopkeeper's way of recovering the commission which he expects your companion to come back and collect when you are safely out of the way. It is a regular method of the small Paris shops to mark up the price of articles which remain long on their hands, as it were to recover interest on the capital invested. This is called "guetling." It is claimed that even in the big shops each department has its damaged or imperfect or worn goods, on whose admission the clerk is allowed an extra commission. But in general the big shops have brought into France the "one-price system."

This was begun a little before 1830 by La Belle Jardiniere, which is still one of the seven biggest shops and owns three of the others. It is still in the hands of the family that made this great change in French commerce. "The Belle Jardiniere" means the Beautiful Garden Girl; it is a sample of the names which the French have always been fond of giving to their shops. Aux Honneur des Enfants (At the Happiness of Children) is the name of a great toy shop. "The Blue and White" is another. Au Bonheur des Dames (At the Happiness of Ladies) was the fancy name chosen by Zola for his great book on the big shops. So houses which make a specialty of mourning goods have names of a gloomy sort. "The Black and White," "The Grey and Black," "The Purple," "The Scabious" (A little flower which the people strew on graves), "Les Deux Sables" (The Two Weeping Willows), and "Le Sablier" (The Hour Glass). Five of the seven great shops have fanciful names: "The Grand Magasin," "Le Grand Depot" (named from its location opposite the palace), the "Bon Marche" (Cheap Market), the "Printemps" (Spring), "La Serriniere" (named from the first public building in the river Seine in the time of Henry IV, which in turn was named from the Samaritan woman at the well), and the "Belle Jardiniere," already spoken of. The two remaining great shops have plain names: "La Place Clichy," which refers to its location in the city, and "La Madeleine" (The House-keeper), which simply indicates its line of trade.

With the abolition of barter and the continuation of fancy names these great shops have created a new career for those who might otherwise have been each at the head of his own little property. In the new system each clerk is not without interest to sell the articles of his shelf. For the customers the price is fixed, but the clerk gets his commission on each sale. This varies according to the kind of goods and the demand that exists for them, so as to put all the clerks on an equal footing. It is the one who sells silk for 2 per cent, while 5 per cent is given the seller of linen. The commission varies, but they are supposed on a week's business to equalize each clerk's remuneration.

Oscar Wilde's Reply.
A story is being told that on the death recently of the great schoolmaster Walter Pater, the editor of a London evening paper telegraphed to Oscar Wilde to ask him to supply some personal gossip about the dead man, who was known to be a friend of the deceased, whereupon Mr. Wilde wired back: "Leave the gossip to the jackals, not the lions of literature."
