

Two Wedding Cakes Adorn Bride And Groom's Table

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the Baptist Parsonage, Summerside, on November 24th, by Rev. Mr. Howlett when Ruth Pauline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Kristiansen was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Harry Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Lewis of Alberton.

The bride looked lovely in a navy blue suit with pick accessories and carried a nosegay of pink roses.

Her sister, Mae Kristiansen, was bridesmaid. She was dressed in grey with pink accessories and carried a nosegay of red roses.

Alfred Lewis, brother of the groom was best man.

After the wedding they motor-ed to the home of the bride, where a delicious supper was served to a number of guests. Two beautiful cakes adorned the bride's table. The bride's cake was in white with a miniature bride and groom and the groom's cake was trimmed in pale blue.

After the delicious supper, the guests departed to their homes, leaving Mr. and Mrs. Lewis many happy years of wedded life.

Previous to her marriage the bride was tendered a shower at the home of Mrs. Hubert MacNevin, when the bride received many beautiful and useful gifts.

ELLEN'S DIARY

James Thinks It Is Best For Girls To Knit, Sow, etc.

Bluest sky-and sun, in which the geraniums on the sills bathed happily...blue shadows in clear and beautiful designs on the snow...and then the silver and dim of the hovering clouds and that bugs which indicates a change in the weather is nearing—that was today, with the January month walking the valley. "A light snowfall" a forecast said.

"Could be—at first. But there's more rain than snow in those clouds, I'd say" a visiting farmer hearing, offered.

"There are sparks running on the stove-cover" we said "and the dinner-potatoes boiled dry." James nodded. "And not bad signs to go by either. I've often heard the older folks say the like would bring rain. And" he added "I'm not too much taken up with a January thaw. Usually an icy treacherous time follows it."

Sleek sparrows—no wind or frost to ruffle their plumage, lifted light-winged from the rose-bush beyond the window at the pup's teasing bark.

"Did you sell your fat cattle yet?" James queried of the visitor as the two lingered in the kitchen.

"Not yet" he replied. "They don't seem to be gaining too much. I must weigh them shortly."

"Not a bad plan" James agreed, "then you'll know just how they are doing. Prices."

"Vary" he said. "I hear the top price is."

"In the West," James commented, "I see there's been a scarcity of beef. Storms and little shipping from the farms. And the price to the consumer was high."

MARY HAWORTH
Teen-Age Girl Tries To Take Away Friends' Beau

Dear Mary Haworth: How does a mother of a teen-age daughter help her to cope with a so-called friend, who can't bear to see his daughter have a boy interested in her, without trying to get him for herself?

My daughter is attractive and sweet, without any meanness in her; and can't understand how another can do such things.

I am at a loss to know how to help her; and am hoping that you can supply the answer. Sincerely, E.H.

HIGH-MINDNESS NEEDED
Dear E.H.: This above all: don't try to run block-and-tackle interference for your adolescent daughter, in her social relationships with other young people.

However, if it is any comfort, I have observed that the genuinely high-minded girl, who has grace of character, and who is genuinely attractive to boys, simply doesn't have to be on guard against "bad friends" of her own sex. They cut their own throats, while trying to cut hers. It may take a little time, to achieve the full unmistakable demonstration of this truth, but that's the way it turns out.

So, as your daughter's champion, don't preach fear or defensive in fighting tactics to her. Rather, encourage her in serene self-confidence and composure in staying on the beam of her purposes, in the midst of rival skirmishing. M.H.

CHILD'S HABIT
Dear Mary Haworth: Would you please help me solve a very difficult problem concerning my five-year-old boy. He sucks his lower lip, which in turn has made it very big and ugly. He has been sucking it now for nearly four years.

We have tried whipping him; ignoring it; and have taken him to a doctor—but still, no success. Any guidance you can give us will be much appreciated. C.C.

GUIDANCE RECOMMENDED
Dear C.C.: I would suppose that your child's lip-sucking is a compulsive mannerism—a kind of "tic," that is symptomatic of sick emotional tension; or emotional stress; or emotional turbulence.

It is probably in the same general category as nail biting, or head rolling. Spanking and ignoring won't help. One is neglect—neither, the other is neglect—neither, of which is a remedy for emotional illness.

For first-hand expert guidance, in getting at the cause and cure of the difficulty, consult specialists at the Child Guidance Clinic in the town through which you write. See the address in the telephone book—listed under the name of the town; as for example: Podunk Child Guidance Clinic.

As for your doctor who didn't help, evidently he isn't trained to treat emotional ailments in children. But the Child Guidance Clinic has a psychiatrist, a psychologist and a psychiatric social worker on the staff (according to my copy of the directory of Psychiatric Clinics in the United States). M.H.

OKAY TO STOP?
Dear Mary Haworth: I am a girl 17, a senior in high school; and for three months I have gone steady with Joe, also 17, who is a very wonderful boy. But already he is getting serious, and

I had told him at the start I wouldn't want that. He is going off to college for four years, and I don't wait to wait for him. Not that I don't like him, but I am not ready to settle down.

This being my last year, I would like to date other boys, but everyone would say I made a fool of Joe. Should I break with him before he gets more serious? Or should I date other boys, and Joe also, occasionally?

I've gone steady about five times since I was a sophomore. When I didn't go steady I was called a boy-chaser. Please advise me. G.B.
