THEN WHY IS THERE BARRY MANILOW?

Crafts, Graduates, and Countries beyond the sea

By Sam Okello

In Canada, there are various organizations that have shown concern for the conditions of Third World refugees. A couple of weeks ago, the World University Service of Canada (WUSC) sponsored a tremendous display of Caravan products at the Robertson Library Pit. Caravan, a Third World handicraft sale, was a priority to help market refugee products. Such a market enables people develop patterns of self-reliance and meet basic needs in their struggle for political and economic self determination.

The efforts of those who contributed towards this worthwhile project should not go unnoticed. It is crystal clear that the response from caring people on the Island is growing. It is resulted in UPEI faculty members and students volunteering in Third World Countries.

Some of these participants are: Economics Professor, Walter Fobes, who while on sabbatical leave, taught at a Cooperative college in Tanzania; others are UPEI graduates, Carol Cameron, who was in Swaziland, and Mark Smitheran, who was in Kenya. Ian Hogg is teaching at Technical School in Swaziland. Joe Byrne is in the Dominican Republic working on Youth for development project. These participants, and several others, have played an important role by contributing their skills and efforts to international development.

Consider living in one area wrought by civil war or regional conflict.

"I must confess that to communicate from one culture to another, particularly when the language is not one's own native tongue, but acquired, as English is to me, can be cumbersome."

Such is a problem facing Third World refugees. Refugees are reflective of the denial of basic freedoms; physical safety of people; freedom from prosecution or civil war—all violations deterring human rights development.

midst of flagrant disregard for their human rights.

This context is meant to bring readers' attention to Third World issues. Be that as it may, I must confess that to communicate from one culture to another, particularly when the language is not one's own native tongue, but acquired, as English is to me, can be cumbersome. Nevertheless, it is my duty to make people aware of international affairs, to create an ability to understand issues of underdeveloped countries and to encourage people to come up with better solutions to human rights development.

Better solutions add to a healthy Development in a society. What might appear here a story, is part of that healthy process.

No wonder that the impact of the economics has socitragic consequences for refugees. These consequences have resulted in to an untold suffering in human history.

Condoms Get Good Pick-up

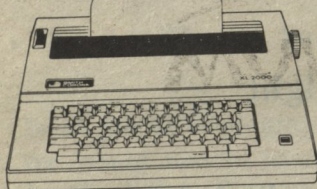

MONTREAL (CUP)

The University of Montreal student newspaper had its most popular edition ever when condoms were inserted in the first 10,000 copies of last week's issue.

"We had never seen the distribution boxes emptied so quickly — in 24 hours," said Continuum advertising manager Gilles Tremblay.

The condoms were provided free of charge by Ortho Pharmaceutical Ltd. The insertion was part of a campus wide information campaign against sexually transmitted diseases.

Students and Senior Citizens launch Irish Initiative

Ottawa, Oct. 19, 1987. Soul Force has announced its plans for the summer of 1988. From its base in Cloughmills, Northern Ireland, students and senior citizens from Northern America will fan out over the width and breadth of Northern Ireland promoting peace. The plan for peace will use the formula set out by Mahatma Gandhi which he learned from his mentor Leo Tolstoy.

Soul Force is now accepting names of volunteers to work in Northern Ireland for 2 week periods. Soul Force will pay airfare and expenses for volunteers but will not pay salaries. Early interest from volunteers indicate that most workers will be students and senior citizens. Anyone who would like to take part in this program should contact Soul Force by letter at its office:
