(SPECIAL DESPATCHES TO THE EXAMINER.) THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

Ceremonies at its Unveiling.

AN ELABORATE DISPLAY.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28. A light fog pervades the river and harbor, completely obscuring Bedloe's Island from the high roofs of the Broadway buildings, when thousands of people expect to view the unveiling of the Statue of Liberty and the naval parade.

LATER. NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—6 p. m. During the procession on the shore the vessels of the North Atlantic squadron were being prepared for the marine pageant. The other vessels had formed in line, and at one o'clock the signal for the start was given. There were over one hundred vessels in line, with their gay decorations they made a splendid appearance.

Off 23rd Street the U. S. steamer Despatch was waiting with the Presidential party on board, and as that vessel fell into line a President's salute was fired.

Upon arriving at Bedloe's Island, the warships and batteries fired a salute of 100 guns as President Cleveland landed.

When all was ready, General Schofield called the assemblage to order and Rev. Dr. Storrs offered prayer.

Count DeLesseps then made a brief presentation speech in behalf of the Franco-American Union.

At the moment the veil was drawn another salute was fired from all guns in the harbor.

President Cleveland then accepted the statue for the people of the United States and M. DeFairo responded for the Republic of France.

The ceremonies then closed.
