MARY HAWORTH

Job Holder Wants Help With Writing His Book

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I handle a difficult job for eight hours a day and I am tired at night. But I want to write a book in my spare time, a book that I believe will help others as well as myself. I would like to finish the book within this year, as I think the time is propitious for it.

I know so well what I am going to write about, and I believe in what I have to say, but I think and talk more quickly than I can write. My typing is even worse than my handwriting and I couldn't edit.

Is there some person or some agency that could help me? About book writing and publishing I know nothing. I would so much appreciate your guidance, D.W.

DEAR D.W.: Taking your statements at face value that you think and talk more rapidly than you can write; that you have in mind clearly what you want to say; that you would be "authoring" at the end of your regular work day, etc. My advice is, use a dictaphone machine to ease the labor of authorship in the opening rounds of literary creation.

An author friend of mine, now deceased, whose falling eyesight was somewhat of a hindrance towards the end of a modestly successful career, turned out three books in the last decade of her life with the primary help of a dictaphone machine and a now-and-then typist who made typewritten copies of the material the author "talked" into the dictaphone.

In that particular author's production routine, as the basic manuscript began to pile up to book-size proportions, it was taken in hand by her literary editor, affiliated with the publishing house that published her books. From that point on, the editor was negotiating back and forth between author and publishing house nabobs to effectuate whatever rewrites were editorially deemed advisable to bring the book into final, full-fledged, acceptable shape.

In your case, you can't expect a publishing house to assign an editor to guide and encourage you along the path to published authorship until you've first produced a book-size manuscript whose potential worth speaks for itself when scanned by either an able marketing agent or by the reading personnel of a publishing house.

Sea View WI Plays Canasta At Meeting

Mrs. William Simmons was hostess to the members of the Sea View Women's Institute recently with the president, Mrs. Horace Stewart, presiding. The singing of Old Black Joe was followed by the Mary Stewart Collect in union.

Eight members answered roll call by paying a cent for every letter in the name of her birthplace. The minutes and treasurer's report were read and adopted.

The secretary, Mrs. Earle MacKay, was asked to see about repairs to the electricity at the school, and to pay for painting the black board. She was also asked to send in a Memoriam in memory of a late member, Nettie Barwise. Resolutions for the annual convention were held over for next meeting. The president reported that the Canada Packers labels were ready for shipment.

Meeting adjourned and refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Douglas Woodside. The social part of the evening consisted of auction and Canasta.

Next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Louis Adams.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Staidest Toes Tap To Lifting Irish Tunes

"By St. Patrick's Day, we can be sure that Spring is on the way," a visitor of this afternoon offered.

"Yes," James agreed. "By then the cold of the winter will be past. Not that we may not get the odd snap of hard frost after that, and snowfall. But we sha'n't mind it so much!" He smiled. "We'll know the cropping is ahead." "Nice days these," the visitor nodded.

"Couldn't be better for the time of year. The snow is going gradually, and that's the way I like to see it. No great flooding to bother folks. I notice the stream is commencing to catch some. By afternoons there is a fuller flow."

This will be, the thought comes, "St. Patrick's Day in the morning!" A day those whose ancestry stems from the "Ould Sod" will greet warmly. History and legend regarding the family name will be recalled proudly: "Mother always said..." Or "My granddaddy used to tell us of it, for he remembered the home back there quite clearly."

The home, and doubtless, the peat fires, and the green of the sod. There was nowhere grass so pretty-shot with gold lights it was. And the fairy-folk, the wee people, would he not speak of, they that wander so intriguingly through its tales?

The music, we shall hear - that which honours the Day. The lilting songs usually a bit sad, and the dance tunes so bright and gay that even the staidest toes commence to tap the measure. The music, indeed, worldwide, it is each to his own in folk-music, to make it well loved.

"Now, what music did you like best, which stirred your heart - strings most when you were overseas?" we recall inquiring of a Veteran of World War I, back in the years. He was Scottish by name, lineage and at heart. And obviously amazed at being asked such a silly question.

"Why, the bagpipes, Ellen!" he replied. "When we heard them give out, with a stirring Scottish march we would follow them through thick and thin. Yes, and did!" he said soberly.

Now it is the green of the lochs and the haunting, lovely Irish tunes. And tales of Patrick, the slave-lad, taking good care of Chief Niall's flock against a hillside. Lonely often and alone, looking off wistfully toward the land of his birth, which history says "may have been Britain or France"; of Patrick the man, come a second time to Ireland, not as a slave but as an ordained Priest - a dedicated missionary, bringing the blessing of Christianity - making converts of chiefs and people, plucking a shamrock leaf to point out the meaning of the Trinity - come back to the land, he as a youth had learned to love.

James recalls now the afternoon's conversation. He looks at the calendar. "We won't have long to wait for St. Patrick's Day now" he smiles.

"Until tomorrow - Diary - Good - night...."

Irishtown WI Completes Quilt

A profitable sum has been realized from the weekly card parties held by the Irishtown Women's Institute, and it was decided to continue holding these each Monday night during the month of March.

Ten members attended the March meeting of the Irishtown WI, held at the home of Mrs. E. B. MacLeod. Mrs. Robert Stewart gave the thought for the month entitled "The Teacher". Roll call was answered with "a word often mispronounced".

A satisfactory financial report was given by the treasurer and several calls and treats were reported by the visitation committee. March visitors are Mrs. Clair Profit, Mrs. H. G. MacLeod and Mrs. Clair Campbell. Mrs. Borden Campbell will be the school visitor. Money was voted for the CAC subscription.

A questionnaire from the convener of education was answered. Items of local business were discussed and Red Cross work was turned in, including a completed quilt. Some remnants were sold and the remaining pieces will be kept to use in making two more quilts, which are being started by Mrs. Clair Campbell and Mrs. Clayton Staver.

Mrs. A. F. Mann prepared and read an instructive paper on education and Mrs. H. B. MacLeod read excerpts on health. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Clayton Stewart. Two contests were worked out, and refreshments were served.

The meeting concluded with the national anthem.
