Reviews Progress In Fight Against Polio

A brief history of polio and the search for a vaccine as a preventive means, was the subject of an interesting talk given by Dr. Burton Howatt, Provincial Health Officer, at Rotary yesterday. He remarked that the search has been going for some forty years and has been marked with frustrations and mystery and even disaster. In dealing with the causative agent, he said that polio is caused by a virus, so small that it would take about ten billion of them to cover the head of a pin. With the use of the ordinary powerful microscope we were never able to see an individual polio virus, but by employing an electron microscope shadow images were produced believed to be the virus. The polio virus seems to have a preference for the nerve cells of the brain and the spinal cord, it is the destruction of these cells that causes the paralysis. Although we tend to regard polio as a new disease it was known and pictured in ancient Egypt. The first modern description of the disease was given in England in 1789 but it wasn't until 1890 that it became recognized as an infectious disease. As far back as 1910 an attempt was made in the United States to produce a vaccine. In the 80's two attempts had been made to vaccinate humans resulting in some paralytic deaths and setting the back years. The speaker reviewed the further steps leading up to the Salk vaccine and its use at the present time. Dr. Howatt assured the gathering that every batch of vaccine produced in Canada has been tested by the Laboratory of Hygiene at Ottawa. The slightest shadow of doubt causes the discarding of any batch, this sometimes causes some delay in deliveries, but local authorities know that which does arrive is both safe and effective. Out of the 800,000 children to receive the vaccine in Canada in 1955, no cases of polio were found which could be attributed to the vaccine. In referring to the future, Dr. Howatt said there is a long road ahead in research and control, and that they may be a probability that the Salk vaccine is not the final answer. A number of workers are attempting to find a strain of polio virus which will produce the immune response without producing paralysis and to be given as a live vaccine. Dr. Howatt said that in the not too distant future strains of the three major types of polio virus may be developed and made into a living vaccine which may be given by mouth, following more closely the route of infection. It is even conceivable that chemists may combine certain chemicals to form polio viruses which would be completely pure, produced without benefit of living cells. These would leave out the disease producing part, yet retain the immunity producing segments. "If we were to progress no further," said Dr. Howatt, "on the basis of field trials and past experience, I believe once we had most of the population inoculated, that paralytic polio would cease to be an epidemic. So far it is not known if and how often booster doses will be necessary, but Dr. Salk thinks frequent doses will not be required. Others feel that the only real answer to more of less permanent immunity is a living vaccine. "To the majority of questions the future, as usual, must give the answer." The speaker was introduced by the chairman, Dr. Health McIntyre, and thanked by the co-chairman, Earl Baker. Dr. Todor Gencheff, and Sheldon Carson, recently elected to membership, were read the Rotary Charge by George Walters and given copies of the club literature by his associate on the Rotary Information Committee, G. J. Tweedy. The right hand of fellowship was given by President Frank Curtis.
