Century-Old Message Found In Arctic Cairn

OTTAWA, Nov. 20 (CP)—A faded, century-old message left by a party searching in vain for Sir John Franklin's ill-fated expedition to find the Northwest Passage has been discovered by an Ottawa seismologist.

Paul Bremner, 24, made the historic discovery beneath a cairn of flat stones on the shore of Cornwallis Island, about 2,000 miles north of Winnipeg.

Returning to Ottawa after a 14-month tour of duty recording earthquakes at lonely Resolute Bay, Bremner said he was making his way back to the station after a 15-mile ski jaunt during the summer months when he came upon the cairn, a mile inland from the head of Assistance Bay.

Bremner returned later with Constable Ed Boone of the R.C.M.P. and Flying Officer H. C. Uthoff of the R.C.A.F. They pried open the lead-sealed outer canister and found a smaller can inside. In the inner can was a single sheet of yellowing paper folded in a light cotton bag.

It contained this message, printed with an old hand press: "Left Aug. 4th, 1851, by a party in search of the Franklin expedition from the Felix, Capt. Sir John Ross, lying on the south shore Cornwallis Island, 19 miles west of Cape Hotham with H.M.S. Lady Franklin and Sophia, Capt. Penny and Stuart."

"H.M.S. Resolute, Assistance, Intrepid and Pioneer are N of Griffith Island.

"Provisions at Cape Hotham, Spencer and Whalen Point. (Signed) "C. G. Phillips, Commander, R.N."

bell, at that time pastor of the Hartsville Presbyterian Church. Miss Maria MacLeod was the bridesmaid, and Mr. Malcolm MacLennan, the groomsmen. Of their fifty years of married life, nine years were spent at Granville, seven years in Quincy, Mass., and thirty-four years in Breadalbane Village, where they moved in 1917. Their many friends sincerely wish Mr. and Mrs. MacLeod many more happy returns of their wedding anniversary.

Political Status Of Sudan Remains Very Unsettled

By TOM STON. KHARTOUM, Nov. 20 (AP)—The political status of the Sudan today is as unsettled as the broad sand that swirls across the broad desert on the outskirts of Khartoum.

The disturbance was created last month when Egypt abrogated the 1899 agreement providing for Anglo-Egyptian rule of the Sudan and tore up its 1936 treaty permitting British troops in the Canal Zone. Egypt's King Farouk was proclaimed king of the Sudan.

Sudanese opinion is divided and confused. Some Sudanese back Egypt's action, others oppose it. The Sudan is a 1,000,000-square-mile area along the Upper Nile. Its northern border adjacent to Egypt is an area of hot desert sands. The South Sudan, bordering on the Belgian Congo, is a lush, tropical area.

Britain continues to run the country as if the 1899 agreement were still in effect. There are only a few hundred British administrators in key spots in this land of 7,500,000 natives.

The Egyptians have not followed through in trying to take over the Sudan.

Denounces Egypt One of the country's two Moslem leaders, Sir Abdel Rahman El Mahdi Pasha, denounced the Egyptian abrogation as "a plot to enslave the Sudan". He claims to be the spiritual leader of 4,000,000 Moslems.

He said he'd like to see the Sudan "realize her freedom", but some here who believe that the Mahdi, head of the Ansar sect of the Sudanese Moslems, has ambitions to become king of the Sudan himself.

His religious rival, Sir Sayed Ali El Mirghani Pasha, leader of the Khatmia sect, maintains: "I am a religious leader and have nothing to do with politics", but observers contend he holds a wide influence over the political thinking of his followers.

Three major political parties dominate the Sudanese political scene. They are the Umma (Independence) Party, the pro-Egyptian Ashigga and the National Front.

Abdullah Bey Khalil, energetic secretary-general of the Umma Party and leader of the Sudanese legislative assembly, expresses confidence the Sudanese "will exercise the right of self-determination not later than 1956."

Ismael Bey El Ashari, head of the violently anti-British Ashigga Party, says his members stand for "a federation of the Sudan and Egypt, with both as equal parties having the same rights and duties."

The National Front group platform calls for self-government for the Sudanese with a benevolent tie with Egypt.

Improvements In War Veterans Allowance Urged

OTTAWA, Nov. 20 (CP)—Improvements in the war veterans allowance act were urged in the Commons yesterday by Capt. Clair Gillis (COP—Cape Breton) as a means of helping Canada's needy veterans.

At the same time, he pressed the government to announce an immediate increase in the allowance, which goes to veterans who are hard up or prematurely aged as a result of war service.

He read an advertisement from a Maritime paper, the Sydney Post-Record, asking for a stove and bed clothing for a needy veteran. It had been inserted by the local branch of the Canadian Legion.

He suggested the act be amended so that it would not be necessary for an advertisement of that type to appear anywhere in Canada. He was sure the Veterans Department did not want to see such ads.

The recipient of such an allowance was a veteran whose health was wrecked by war service. The act should be amended to give greater administrative flexibility to the department's welfare officers.

The government also should remove the means test from the allowance payments. While receiving the allowances, veterans should be allowed to earn higher casual earnings. When retired and receiving the allowance, the veterans should be encouraged to do some casual work.

He said that the act does not permit veterans in industry whose health breaks down to draw from welfare funds set up by their employers. The purpose of the funds, to which the employees contributed was to provide a payment of $8 or $9 a week for workers who fall ill. But the veterans, if they wanted the war veterans allowance, could not draw from a fund to which they had contributed for years. That should be remedied.

A change also should be made to regulations governing payment of the allowance to Imperial veterans with 20 years residence and their widows. Often, a veteran died just short of the 20-year residence requirements and his widow lost the allowance. There should be more flexibility in those regulations.

A larger allowance should be paid to homeless veterans living in institutions. They received only $8 a month, which allowed them to buy only few comforts.

Thames Houseboat Cuts Living Cost

By Muriel Narraway (Canadian Press Staff Writer) MAIDENHEAD, England, Nov. 20 (CP)—For six smart girls from Ontario, a 40-foot motor-cruiser moored on the Thames represented a solution to the high cost of living in London.

The Canadians, all in their early 20's, arrived in Britain two months ago, brimful of wanderlust. They found living accommodation so expensive that they looked around for something cheaper.

The result: A houseboat with six bunk beds, cooking facilities, and a weekly rent of just under $5, split six ways.

"So far we've had a simply wonderful time," said plump, jolly Donald MacPhee of Mount Forest, Ont., "with plenty of good weather for sunning on deck."

With an eye to business, however, the girls' first thought was to find jobs in this red-brick Berkshire market town, set in beautiful country 25 miles west of London. Now all are working in a local factory, helping to make linings for automobile bearings, at an average wage of $5 weekly.

"It's a wonderful way of getting to know people," said blonde, Toronto-born Beverly Britt, with her film-star grin and a New York polish to her Canadian accent.

First thing that struck the enterprising travellers was the difference in living standards. They thought it wonderful to get full meal at a good hotel for the equivalent of about $150—until they found out how long it took to make that much. Troubles At Times Life on the Thames has its troubles, too. Once the river rose three feet overnight and willow, ashburn-haired Jeanne McLean, who comes from Toronto, stepped into cold water early one dark morning while starting for the factory. The three-cabin cruiser is too small for more than one at a time to move around the "dining-room" and kitchen. "So we draw lots for cooking and chores," said copper-haired Sheila Jarrett, also of Toronto. In fact, the girls draw lots for everything including week-end invitations, the four bicycles they bought here, and the food rations.

Sometimes the Thames is a little hard to take on damp November days, and some of the girls plan to take jobs in London soon. These include Toronto-born Margaret Hurd and Claire Watts of Burlington, Ont. The others remain at the factory until Christmas—taking rooms in town. They will then all meet in London.

The girls wear jeans on the boat and at work in this provincial residential area, and are wondering what it will feel like to wear a smart suit again. Ages range from 20 to 23 and there are
