Queens Teachers Meeting Is Addressed By President

The local convention of the teachers of north, west Queens was held at Central Queens Regional High School on September 16, 1966. In his opening remarks, the president, Desmond Gallant, said that each one will derive from the convention only as much as he or she puts into it. He encouraged teachers to take an active part in everything pertaining to education even if it might involve some sacrifice on their part.

As teachers acquire more aids in teaching, their responsibilities increase in proportion. Such conventions, he said, enable teachers to discuss their ideas with other teachers. The first aim is to encourage the development of the child's imagination and the second aim is to offer opportunities for the training of the physical powers. Mr. Ross closed by extending best wishes to all the teachers for a very successful teaching year.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen Addresses Social Seminar

SUMMERSIDE BUREAU OF THE GUARDIAN

The individual no longer is considered as someone apart; independent and self-relient. He is a member of a community and he is entitled to services provided by government from the collective wealth of the country.

These are the words of Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, minister of national health and welfare who addressed the Social Problems Seminar here last night.

Mr. MacEachen pointed out that social welfare as a concept, and in fact, has changed remarkably in response to modern needs. In the past, the term tended to mean a minimum amount of assistance, custody or protection for those exceptional cases who failed to succeed in the nation's economic system.

The minister reminded his listeners that, until recent times, the idea that work was necessary and good and that the indignent should be driven to it was an accepted fact. However, as time passed, the community did recognize that there were certain groups of classes who could never provide for themselves. As a result meagre benefits were provided to groups such as widows with dependent children and the blind.

ECONOMY

Mr. MacEachen explained that the country's economy has developed into a much more complex and diverse structure. As a result, new concepts and a different appreciation of the individual, his family, and their relationship to society have evolved.

The speaker stressed that many families are trapped by their environment and cannot see any way out. They may be dependent on public assistance, see no likelihood of steady employment because they have no skill or job opportunities and the problem is compounded by a crushing burden of debt and by inadequate housing. The whole situation creates emotional problems and strains family ties.

Mr. MacEeacen was optimistic that there would be, all across the country, a great expansion of welfare services in addition to work counselling now provided by National Employment Service. He was certain that these services will help the individual come to grips with his problems and plan his own course to independence. 'Swamped by their own problems" he continued "and often unaware of the resources available, many individuals cannot make their own way out of the morass of poverty. It is now recognized and, indeed, expected that governments have a responsibility to ensure that the individual can take advantage of the opportunities provided for him".

Concluding his remarks, Mr MacEachen stressed that in any discussion on social welfare that education be given a prominent place. Giving money to persons was not enough he insisted. The recipients must be taught the many alternate and effective uses for their income They need education to help them recognize the developments of a technological society and to understand their role in it.

program instituted here and as a result of his encouragement the Premier said he expected to see a long rang program of development underway by next spring.

He noted the province had two financing problems with the first involving the finding of sufficient money to carry on certain cost sharing programs to which The Island is already committed "this means three to five million dollars a year." The second involved facing the 'stagnant' condition of the present economy and because of it introducing a new development program. But he also stated receiving extra money through present programs was not the answer.

"It is increasingly evident we can no longer operate the government here on a year to year basis as in the past," he said, "we must look ahead and budget on a five to 10 year basis in order to know where we are going."

He was accompanied to the province by Hon. J. Allan MacEachen, minister of health, who was scheduled to address a Prince County welfare gathering last night in Summerside.

Here's how Blue Shield-Blue Cross can protect you against the sometimes crippling cost of PRESCRIPTION DRUGS!

Canadians spend approximately $200 million a year on prescribed drugs. That's why Blue Shield-Blue Cross now offers a plan of protection against these and other extra costs, not covered by basic medical and hospital plans.

This Extended Health Benefits plan (E.H.B.) covers, in addition to prescription drugs; private hospital room, private duty nursing, extensive x-ray, laboratory procedures, health appliances, ambulance and other essential services.

This is a "company group" plan available to firms with 10 or more employees. It is designed to eliminate the heavy cost of prolonged illness or accident.
