host Pat Mastroianni, best known for his television role of Joey Jeremiah, "was pretty cool," said Fraser. "I grew up watching Degrassi. We got to go out with him and hang out for a bit."

Fraser was quite happy with the national exposure gained from the television appearance. "There's been a lot of reaction to it." That said, the experience surrounding the taping was not quite ideal. "It was a different environment playing in that situation. I'd rather be playing with a crowd right in front of me than having everyone sitting there waiting for their cue to clap. It wasn't as cool as a live show, but it's still important."

With three years experience, Arlibido's outlook continues to improve. "I think a couple years ago we were feeling more pressure than we are now because we knew that you'd have to do stuff like getting a manager... Now we have a manager that we're confident in. Now it's like whatever happens happens. I guess it doesn't matter whether or not we're all playing in country bands in ten years, doing session work or whatever. Right now it's just cool to rock out on the road — that's all we're caring about now."

The band's second independently released album, All The World's America, was recently released.
