ELLEN'S DIARY

Ride To The Granary Is A Mission Of Seedtime

"Would you like to come with Gran'daddy and me in the truck to bring home grain from the other granary, right now?" Alex asked this afternoon. We peered into the oven. The last loaf of our baking was browning. By rights it still needed the eye of the cook to bring it up to its best. But then, we reasoned, what is a loaf of bread to a ride along the fields on a mission of the seedtime? Never again perhaps would we and the like of this lovely day of it, "Come together again."

We rode to upland fields which command a wide view: south the white spire of the "Old Kirk" and the village roofs. And on every hand the farms reached away from the homes, back to the woodlots: stock now on the green velvet of their pastures. Completing the pretty pattern, was the red of the cropping - fields, the green of the haylands. Tractors piled their rounds, dragging this and that machine, their objective: to get the seeds tucked away.

On one piece of red land, fertilizer was spread.

"It's costly stuff, that-these times" James said. And how easily it was being applied by way of tractor and spreader. Once upon a time, we remembered, it was a laborious task, as it was spread by hand from a toted pail, seizing a time for it before the wind of day was come, or later when it had calmed. Later too, in an improved and - modern method of then, it fust be shoveled into a spiralling gear attached to the box of the farm-wagon.

"Yes" James offered "it would break a farmer to use much of that nowadays.

This spring the rite of sowing has fallen to Rob who "Doesn't seem to have much else left to him to do "since it is the farmer from the house across the lane and at times Mack, with Jamie and Gage who operate the tractors. This leaves James to a roving commission which fetches and carries for them in the little truck, and tends to details inclined to be overlooked by the rest...Oh horse draws the old seeder.

This implement is interesting to us, in that it has the childreris' great-grandfather's careful numbers on it, telling the exact amount of wheat and other grains, he, in his day and generation, was wont to sow to each acre.

Alex keeps the history of the various members of the herd in mind though several of them look as alike as peas in a pod.

"We raised that one" he will tell us. "Yes, that's her mother over there. And there" he will nod "is a sister."

"But how do you tell them apart?"

"Eh?" with a young grin "I just know them."

"And this one?" we may ask of a youngling.

"That's one we brought from... Don't you remember? He was only small when he came. Guess he'll go off the grass this summer if he does well." How they love it, the men of the name, down to Alex, all are steeped and dyed in the farming.

Dandelions star richly the orchards as bright as the wild canary we saw on a lawn-limb today. Swallows build. We plant marigolds. How busy, and lovely, in this June-time is our world!

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good-night....

MARY HAWORTH

Non-Marrying Bachelor Is Not Husband Material

Dear Mary Haworth: I am pushing 40 but look younger. Four years ago I was left a widow with four youngsters.

A year ago I met a bachelor, five years my junior. We were immediately attracted and enjoyed dating. He is the sole support of his ailing parents, and rather frugal.

We broke off after a few months, at his suggestion. He just couldn't take on four children in addition to supporting his parents. I am heartbroken. I am financially independent and recently bought a home.

Later we met again at a party. The attraction still exists. He took me home and wants to resume dating. However, he says we mustn't get serious as he has no intention of ever getting married.

Should I date him occasionally in the hope that eventually he will change his mind? Or should I refuse to have anything to do with him? Your views will be greatly appreciated. God love you.— D.D.

Dear D.D.: I reckon you wouldn't continue to spend money on worthless stock, once you were reliably advised that it would never pay off? And by the same token, I see no sense in your continuing to invest time and — or hope in this bachelor.

You are in quest of a life companion, which is a sound objective. But the bachelor isn't interested in that assignment in relation to you, at any rate. When he says he has no intention of ever getting married, he means he has no such intention towards you. He is trying diplomatically to be honest and aboveboard on that score.

Eventually he may marry — after the death of both his parents, when he is urgently in want of a new mom-type al-liance. Or sooner, if he loses his head (as the phrase is) over some congenial woman who poses no problems that he can see: who seems all glit-edged security, with no liabilities (i.e., no forms of need that would tax his selfishness).

The very fact that a strong mutual attraction exists is reason enough for refusing to date him, now that his cards are again on the table, as before.

It would be a compound waste of time to continue seeing him on a pastime basis, thus becoming more deeply entolled in forfeiting opportunities of possibly getting to know other men who might be the answer to your prayer. M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: Some time ago you mentioned a booklet by Emmet Fox, "The Golden Key," that outlines a prayer formula for clearing up difficulties. After many months' search I am still unable to find it in the local bookshops. Can you tell me what publishing house puts it out? J.D.

Dear J.D.: The Church of the Healing Christ, with headquarters at the Astor Hotel in New York City, sponsors distribution of this brochure, I believe. Also you will find it in a volume of essays by the late Dr. Fox, titled "Power Through Constructive Thinking," first published by Harper and Brothers in 1930, and a perennial best seller for many years thereafter. M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: About two years ago you mentioned a book about how to keep house. Would you kindly repeat the author's name and the publisher? C.S.

Dear C.S.: The title of the book is "How to Keep House." The author is Mary Davis Gillies, long-time interiors-and-architectural editor of McCalls. The publisher: Harper and Brothers. The first edition came out in 1949 and was mentioned in this column the following year— with the immediate result that 20,000 copies were sold, the publisher told us. It's a wonderful book, full of wisdom, know-how and infectious love of homemaking. M.H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Guardian.

MR. AND MRS. HARRY LARGE

First Baptist Church Is Scene Of Double Ring Ceremony

A pretty spring wedding was solemnized recently at the First Baptist Church in Charlottetown, when Margaret Irene, RN, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Loring Rayner of Summerside became the bride of Harry Robertson Large, Charlottetown, son of Mr. Eldon Large and the late Mrs. Large of Albany, P.E.I. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. H. L. Mitton.

The church was artistically decorated with white and yellow mums and the guest pews were marked with pink and blue satin bows.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, looked charming in a wedding gown of white satin, with elbow length veil caught with a crown of pearls. She carried a nosegay of red roses with streamers of red and white roses.

The maid of honor Myrna Pitcairn, RN, a classmate of the bride, wore a ballerina length gown of pale green organza with matching headdress. She carried a nosegay of white and yellow mums.

The groom was attended by his cousin Arthur Large. The ushers were Lowell Large, brother of the groom and Loring Rayner, brother of the bride.

The organist was Mrs. Leigh Dingwell who played the wedding music and accompanied Mrs. Douglas MacKenny who sang "The Lord's Prayer" prior to the ceremony and "O Perfect Love" during thesigning of the register.

The bride's mother chose for her daughter's wedding a dusky rose chiffon dress with beige accessories and a corsage of rose carnations. Mrs. Large, the groom's stepmother, wore a brown suit with yellow accessories and a corsage of yellow carnations.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Charlottetown Hotel for 125 guests. The bride's table was centered with a three tier wedding cake flanked by bouquets of flowers. Mr. George MacKay was the master of ceremonies and Rev. H. L. Mitton proposed the toast to the bride which was responded to by the groom. Mrs. Alex Thompson was in charge of the guest book.

Immediately following the reception the young couple left for a honeymoon trip through the Maritimes and the United States to Niagara Falls. For travelling the bride chose a black and white tweed suit with pink accessories and a corsage of pink carnations.

Mr. and Mrs. Large are now residing in Charlottetown where the bride is on the nursing staff of the Prince Edward Island Hospital and the groom is employed by Simpson-Sears.
