HOUSEHOLD HINTS
When you cut worn jeans down into shorts, save the bottoms of the legs for patch material; add a couple of seams and they make great beanbags.

Stuff a wad of steel wool in the drain opening of the tub next time you give Rover a bath. Water drains through, but the steel wool traps the hair that would clog the drain.

SMUGGLERS FAILED
KUALA LUMPUR (Reuters) Malaysian authorities said Thursday customs officers Wednesday foiled an attempt to smuggle 20,000 duck eggs into the country to evade a tax of more than a cent apiece. The smugglers, approaching the border town of Padang Besar from Thailand, dropped 42 cases of eggs and fled as customs men approached.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Scampie's Welcoming Park Is Warm And Dependable

"Any stars now, Ellen?" James calls down to us from out in the room above the kitchen. "No, no stars" we reply. No stars. But there was a pleasant brightness of season on the snow-spread fields, when we walked up from Jane's end minutes ago, homing from a feminine assembling at another farmhouse of the district, this evening...

An attractive place that is, framed in its fence of white palings, and set on a rise which commands a fine and far view, and includes the valley of our River below. It looks out on an interesting pastoral of fine farmsteads, with their fields and groves, and for added interest there in the school, the churches the hall, and homes in the valley. Modern and very neat that home is, and most hospitable. It is the custom winter-through when our meetings convene at the homes, to be served refreshments and enjoy a social hour at the close. This, as one said, "seems to make them more friendly," the tea too a warming stirrup-cup toward the parting.

No stars. But there was music in the flow of the stream, where darkly it ran beneath the lane-bridge, to enter presently its icy covering, and continue on to sound a bend toward the mill. Calm and hushed, the night is marked soberly, coming by before noon. "Yes, he's in the barn. I want you to come and see him." And there, suspended from an old silver hand-bow beam, was a fox of the farm, taken in a trap. Young and handsome he was, dark-coated, and not so long since fleet of foot. "A red one" we said. "More like gold, I'd say his coat is." Peter offered young eyes a bit and. "And his ears are like velvet, small and black... and what sharp, white teeth, he has! I'm sorry we caught him, but" he shrugged. "I guess it just had to be!"

The old bed creaks. Ellen, have you no thought at all for the morning?" James calls. Until tomorrow... Diary — Goodnight.

MARY HAWORTH

Husband Opposed To Wife Speaking Before Meeting

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Our rabbi's contract with the synagogue is expiring soon. In several weeks the congregation will hold a special meeting to decide upon renewal or termination; and, if renewal, the terms thereof. The rabbi knows of the meeting and its purpose and will not be present.

For several reasons I don't wish to see him continue as our spiritual leader and I consider it my duty as well as prerogative to speak out at the meeting. However, in accordance with Jewish moral principles, I don't speak unfavorably of others behind their back. So I see no alternative but to tell the rabbi, in advance of the meeting, what I plan to say. In speaking to him I would use the utmost tact in phrasing, of course.

My husband objects. He says this gesture would be in poor taste. He says, further, that inasmuch as the rabbi knows of the meeting and its purpose, I won't be backbiting in stating my views without "advance clearance". Please advise P.G.

DEAR P. G.: I agree with your husband that it would be painful had manners to subject the rabbi to a confidential preview of your personal objections to renewing his contract. Indeed the whole format of the special meeting, scheduled to explore congregation sentiment for or against contract renewal, has the diplomatic purpose of enveloping the decision-making in an atmosphere of responsible impersonality.

Further, in any such institutional meetings in the civilized world, where dignitaries are being voted in or out of office, the official records of the meeting properly inscribe only the decision taken.

No record is kept of individual vocalizing, pro and con. The reason being, as one parliamentary expert has explained, that minutes of meetings should not amount to "a gossip sheet."

What is voiced in such meeting in a spirit of objective candor, or fidelity to truth, or emotional bias, to bring cross-section opinion into the open, presumably in the seal of honorable—immutable—"confidential" not to be loosed to the winds thereafter.

Thus I advise you to keep your views under your hat until you share them with the congregation on the appointed evening. And I advise you also to prepare your remarks very carefully for that occasion. Write out your reason for favoring termination of the rabbi's contract. Specify your objections, clearly and concisely and as briefly as possible.

By doing this homework early you will have opportunity for overnight and day-to-day reflection upon the merits of your rationale. And this margin for re-thinking should greatly reduce the possibility of making ill-founded comments you might regret later.

Such prudent precautionary sifting and editing of your negative attitude, concerning the contract renewal, might even lead you, in the final analysis, to change your mind about speaking out.

In process of listening to yourself think, you might discover that your opposition to the rabbi's ministry is more petty, peevish and sorehead, in a spirit of wounded ego, than it is mature minded, judicious and constructively motivated. M. H.

Newly Formed Ballet Company To Present Classical And Contemporary Selections

By JACK BRAUCKMANN VANCOUVER (CP) — Culture in the country is the aim of Ballet British Columbia, a professional ballet company geared to small-stage presentation.

The company plans to begin its first tour next fall, with 47 small towns or cities on its schedule.

Its promoters say presentations by the group will not be a "watered-down" version of classical ballet, nor will its performances be second best.

"We want Canada's best dancers in our troupe," said Stewart James, one of the founders of the National Ballet Guild in Toronto. "If Canada's best are not good enough, then we'll go to other countries to get the quality fine ballet deserves."

Mr. James, a stockbroker who has been interested in the business workings of ballet since before the Second World War, has moved to B.C. and brought with him the culture-in-the-country concept.

Another prime mover in the B.C. attempt to organize a first-class touring ballet company is Mrs. John A. Bourne of Vancouver — known far better to CBC television viewers as Beth Lockhart — dancer, choreographer and commentator.

Miss Lockhart also choreographed Vancouver's Theatre Under The Stars for 10 years.

Mr. James said Ballet British Columbia will hold Canada's first Actor's Equity audition for a ballet company early in the new year.

The company wants about 10 dancers, a conductor, and orchestra of eight, in addition to stage manager, stagehands and a wardrobe mistress.

Miss Lockhart, wife of a Vancouver lawyer and mother of three teenage boys, said: "We will present both classical and contemporary — more contemporary, for instance, than the National Ballet — selections in our first year."

"If we gain the acceptance we hope to achieve, we'll continue that type of selection. If not, we'll try something else."

Budget estimate for the initial season will be about $150,000 — which will come from several sources, including private contributions, possibly grants from three levels of government, corporate donations and ticket sales.

"We are a non-profit organization, registered under the Societies Act," Mr. James said. "Any profit we make in the first season will go toward setting in motion our second year of operation. We don't want to do what most cultural societies do — start the second year flat broke."

The company will be under the supervision of artistic director James Clouser, now ballet master of the famed Royal Winnipeg Ballet.

COCONUT PRETEND SOUFFLE
1/4 c. milk
3/4 tsp. cornstarch
1-3 c. sugar
1/4 tsp. salt
1 c. coconut, flaked (canned)
1 tsp. butter
1/2 tsp. vanilla
4 egg whites
1/2 c. extra coconut, flaked (canned)
Melba Sauce (homemade or purchased)

Heat milk. Blend cornstarch, sugar, salt and coconut. Stir in: cook 4-10 min. Stir in butter and vanilla.

Beat egg whites stiff and fold into the hot mixture. Butter 6 (5 oz.) custard cups and line with additional coconut. Fill 2/3 with soufflé.

Stand cups in pan containing 1" hot water. Bake 15 min. in moderate oven, 375 degrees F, or until puffy, firm to the touch and lightly browned. Serve warm or cold, unmolded and upside down, with Melba Sauce, prepared or purchased.
