

MARY HAWORTH

Girl Needs Guidance

Dear Mary Haworth—Perhaps writing to you will clear my mind a little. How do you accept the fact that a supposedly lovely little 16-year-old daughter has loose morals? She has dated a boy, 18, for six months; and I learned quite by accident that she has petted and been reckless—just short of dire consequences, I would say.

I probably didn't help matters by going to pieces, and bringing things into the open. I told her in no uncertain terms that she was cheap and I couldn't trust her. She said it was over, but this was a lie, as I have reason to know.

I don't excuse the way I handled it. I told her she probably wouldn't graduate; that she probably will be forced to quit—because her emotions will get completely out of control, eventually.

I tell myself that I taught her right from wrong; and emphasized certain standards and principles. But what happened? Where did I make my mistake? One feels that it just can't be my child who has no self-respect. But it is. Can you understand the hurt?

SOMETIMES DISLIKE

Her father doesn't know, because he has such high hopes for her—yet I feel so incompetent to cope. Each time Peggy goes out my heart skips a beat. I think of this worry, and I am almost indifferent to her—as if I am drained of feeling for her. It sounds horrible to say of one's own child, but there are days when I actually dislike her.

We are an average family, religious, not wealthy, and she always has been such a nice girl. Her only comment on a vicious or nasty; is that she likes the boy and can't think it's too wrong. I tell her she has lost her sense of values. Can you offer any helpful suggestions, that I might show her? T. R.

Dear T. R.—From the way you talk, I gather this unhappy discovery is more of a blow to your vanity than a blow to your heart. And as for where you made your mistake—it has been in preaching to your daughter in terms of pious theory, instead of preparing her to govern the realities of human nature.

Now, back briefly to Peggy's indiscretion. I agree that she is making a mistake—and a mistake of ignorance, obviously. She is trying to hold a boy's interest by permitting herself to be literally desecrated. The body is the vehicle of the spirit, and human beings know that by instinct. Conscience is inborn, containing the inherent laws of human betterment.

The boy senses the nature, and the damage, of his offence against Peggy, even though neither admits it. Thus he can't really like or respect himself in the association, even though he may relish the episodic self-interest.

A. N. MacPherson, Kilmuir, containing a donation towards the making of the Afghan; a card from the family of the late Mrs. A. J. MacLeod gratefully acknowledging a spray of flowers the society sent; a letter and donation of five dollars from Mrs. Katie Martin, Concord, Mass.

The members passed in 22 squares for the Afghan. This Afghan when completed will be sent to the Overseas Relief Mission, with a box of used clothing.

The fitted coat is in the vanguard of fashion this spring, but is a new type of fitted coat, semi-fitted, very suave, very crisp. Arthur Jablow does an especially handsome coat, interpreting the new line in a sheer wool garnish-

Pears Can Be Served In Three Different Ways

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN
"May I suggest the use of more canned pears, Madame, to add variety to winter menus?" queried the chef. "They come in light syrup or water - packed. Both methods retain the fine pear flavor and texture."

SERVED THREE WAYS
"For breakfast, they are very good cut in bite-sized pieces and served on crisp cereal with milk and a little brown sugar."
