Murder Is Forgetful

By WILLIAM SOGART

He was covertly watching her hands twist a small lace handkerchief. It expressed the tenseness that was within her. He wished there was some way he could learn more about the strained situation between her and Nick Walker. And he wished her face, startling white in the vague light of the big room, weren't so much like a set mask. It haunted him.

And suddenly, a feeling of dread shot through him. This weird, overstuffed house and the people in it—with an ugly murder in the background—wasn't a nice thing to be around. There were so many buried facts he had to find out—so many uncertainties he had to clear up. What would finally awaken Irene's sleeping mind? Why did she think Johnny was Bart?

There was a lot Nancy could tell him. She was perhaps the strangest of the bunch. Johnny thought he had never been mixed up with so many dark currents in his life.

Mentally, Johnny hitched up his belt and soberly regarded the strange Nancy England.

He said abruptly, "Do you mind if I call you Nancy?"

He saw her hands stop worrying the lace handkerchief.

"Why...no, of course not."
 "It seems much more sociable."
 "Yes, it does."
 "After all, I'll be staying here a while."

"Yes," she said.
 He decided it was exactly the right lead for what he was trying to do, this answer he was attempting to answer. She smiled a little now. That is, half of her face smiled. The affected part of her features did not. Obviously aware of this, of the weird expression it gave her, she went around with that dead-pan look. And, he thought, with something that had died a little inside of her.

"I wonder..." he started, then his question was answered. Moe's voice was saying, "Come on, pal."

into the library. To Johnny, the two of them made a perfect partnership. The Great Dane had attached himself to Moe.

Moe said, looking around, "Say, where is Nick Walker?" Then, turning to Johnny, he added, "I thought you'd be back with your tongues hanging out, so I made three drinks."

"Nick left," said Nancy. Her manner had changed again.

"Three's just enough," Johnny said, offering one of the glasses to the woman.

"She doesn't drink anything," said Moe. He set the tray and one glass on a coffee table, reaching for Johnny's extra drink. "The extra one won't spoil." His round face looked cheerful for once. "I found five kinds of rum."

Johnny's eyes were amazed. He still held the two glasses. "Good God, I hope you didn't find anything else to put in them?"

"No," said Moe. "Just rum." Johnny held one glass toward Nancy England. "Try it. Maybe it will do you good."

She looked up at him, something in her dark eyes. Her smooth hair looked like shiny mahogany around her ivory-white face. "Really, I don't drink."

"Try it." Abruptly, as though with grim determination, she accepted the glass. Her fingers brushed his own, and they were trembling. It was the one outward indication that she was deeply upset about something.

Johnny sipped the cool drink. It was good rum and, amazingly, Moe's blending had accomplished perfect results.

"It does taste nice," said Nancy England.

"Doesn't it though," Johnny said, practically finishing his glass. He watched Nancy. Now that she had made up her mind, the drink was disappearing with alacrity. He offered her one of his cigarettes.

The Great Dane lay stretched on the floor, head between his outstretched paws, looking up at them out of one open eye.

"You think I can't duplicate them?" repeated Moe. "I made a whole shaker full."

"Why didn't you say so?" demanded Johnny. He put his empty glass on the tray, handed the tray to Moe Martin. He was somewhat surprised to see that Nancy England had finished also. He put her glass on the tray, too.

"It might as well just bring in the shaker," said Moe, ignoring the tray and going toward the hall.

Nancy sighed and rested her head against the deep cushion of the armchair. "It does make you feel cooler." She crossed her legs. Johnny observed that she had nicely rounded knees. He wondered why she didn't wear more stylish clothes.

"Yes," he agreed. "It sure has been hot lately. No rain out here at all, they say."

"That's right."
 "Do you do much driving?" Johnny asked.

"Very little."
 Nancy added, "Kay's the good driver in the family. My sister, too...of course, not right now."

"Naturally..." Johnny lit another cigarette. "I understand you are going to stay out here with Irene for a few days?"

"I'm sorry...what did you say?" Her eyes, now did not center on him directly. They appeared slightly out of focus. It must be wonderful, Johnny thought, to get a belt out of a drink as swiftly as that.

"I said..."

PLEASANT GROVE W. I.

The regular monthly meeting of Pleasant Grove Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. Alfred Morrison with an attendance of seven members and five visitors. Meeting opened with the Creed; roll call was answered by a house-cleaning hint. Sick committee reported one visit and treat taken; bill of 40 cents was paid for same. New sick committee, Mrs. Herbert Corrigan and Miss Christine Froud; school committee, Mrs. Leo Doyle and Mrs. Hubert Morrison. It was decided to canvass the district for the Red Cross. An address was read to Mrs. W. E. Hardy and Mr. and Mrs. Edison Hardy, and gifts presented, as they are leaving to take up residence in York. Mr. Hardy very fittingly replied. Lunch was then served and all joined in singing "Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot."
