Attending Community Planning Conference

OTTAWA, Dec. 2 — (CP) — "Astronomical" figures are being spent on liquor in Quebec, the Canadian Temperance Federation's biennial meeting was told Wednesday.

Miss C. C. Sifton of Montreal, executive secretary of the Quebec Temperance League, said that in 1948-49 a total of $53,000,000 in sales was made through Quebec liquor stores. Sales of spirits have climbed 185 per cent since 1925; wine sales more than 56 per cent.

However, Miss Sifton said Quebec now has a "total abstinence" group known as Les Cercles Lacordaire et Ste. Jeanne d'Arc. It has a membership of 80,000. Some 50 delegates from nine provinces, all except Newfoundland where a temperance organization is being organized, are attending the Later Vicky played out the little farce, with Charles aiding and abetting her. She found Anne in his room reading aloud, and as she displayed the length of glimmering whiteness Anne said, "Oh, Vicky, where did you find them?"

"In an unexpected place."
"It often happens that way," said Charles. "One looks and looks and then suddenly things turn up as if some evil spirit had whisked them away and put them back again."

Anne was philosophical. "Well, anyhow, I'm glad they weren't stolen. I always feel so sorry for burglars. It's like Jean Valjean in Les Miserables. The man wants food for his families."

And Charles, with a vision upon him of that thief in rose-colour, changed the subject. "I'm surely not!"
"Yes. I must not impose too long on your hospitality."

Anne said, "You're not imposing. Is he, Vicky?"
"No. There's a perfectly good week-end ahead of you, Mr. Paterson. Why not spend it with us?"

His smiling eyes went from Vicky to Anne. "I'm afraid."
Anne demanded, "Of what?"
"Of me?"

"Yes. When you came to me in that moonlit meadow, it did something to me."
Color flamed in her cheeks. "If you really meant that, it would be nice."

"Nice? Isn't there a bigger word for it than that?"
"Heavenly!"
Vicky interposed, "Am I supposed to be listening?"

"Then I might suggest that this is rather strong wine for Anne's little head."
Charles laughed and Anne laughed with him. It was all very light-hearted and on the surface but Anne, looking stary-eyed into her mirror. Did he, she wondered, mean it? But he couldn't. He was married.

She did not see him alone again, but when the next morning he had gone away in Francis' big car she found, when she went upstairs, a note on her dresser.

"This is my real good-by, my dear. I shall not see you again. I am tarred with a brush which must hoo smirch you. But at night when I sleep under the stars I shall look up and see you shining, too far away for me to reach, but giving always a lovely light."

With her heart beating wildly she went to bed. What did it matter, she asked herself, if he were married? He would worship afar off like Dante and Beatrice. It would be wonderful to think of Charles as Dante.

To Anne, dressing for a ride on the morning after Charles' departure, was brought a message from her mother. She was to come at once to the library.

Hurrying down, she found both of her parents waiting. She kissed her father, then her mother. "Why did you get up so early, darling?"
"I've been up all night." Elinor was lighting a cigarette and her hand trembled. "Anne, we have something to tell you."

The fears that had assailed Anne in the garden swept back upon her. She looked from her mother to her father. "What is it, Daddy?"
When Francis had spoken Anne stood very still, the color drained from her face. For the thing that her father told her was this—that he and his wife would no longer live together.

"Do you mean there's to be a divorce, Daddy?"
"Yes."
Elinor interposed, "We may as well tell her the truth, Francis." He lifted his hand impatiently. "Why weigh her down with it?"
"She'll have to know sometime. It's this way, Anne. I've found someone else. What has happened has happened. But I won't take all the blame. Your father is no better than I—venomously—only he has not been quite honest about it."

"It's true, my darling," Francis two-day meeting.
W. C. Good of Brantford, Ont., was named president of the Federation, succeeding Roscoe Rood of Windsor, Ont.

Resignation of the Rev. Dr. John Coburn of Toronto, 76-year-old secretary of the Federation, was accepted. Rev. John Linton of Toronto will succeed him.

Dr. Coburn told the group that the social, economic and political life of Canada is dominated to a large degree by the "powerful liquor traffic."

"Many churches are practically silent on this great issue and give little support to the temperance movement," he said.

In 41 years consumption of alcoholic liquors had increased in Canada from 41,000,000 gallons a year to 179,000,000. During that period the population had increased by 40 per cent, liquor consumption by 360 per cent.

Provincial representatives also presented their reports. G. H. Vilespott of Edmonton said that liquor forces in Alberta are entrenched more firmly than ever.

"There is more bootlegging in Alberta than there ever was in the days of prohibition," he said.

W. S. Barker of Upper Blackville, N. B., told delegates about a liquor store in Newcastle, N. B., where $750,000 was grossed in a single year from liquor sales.

said hastily. "Our world isn't your world. But we love you."
Anne, frozen with horror, managed to say, "I thought when people look at things differently."

"Well, I don't want to be different. I don't want the world pointing fingers and the servants whispering."
"Yes—hysterically—but I wouldn't believe. I thought my father and mother couldn't."

Out of a dead silence Francis said, "Don't judge us too harshly." "I'm not judging." He was standing close to her and she turned and held her face against his shoulder. When at last she raised her head it was to ask with a note of desperation, "What are you going to do with me?"

Elinor hesitated. "We had thought you might like to go away with Vicky for a time and make up your mind about—us."
"Make up my mind?"
"Yes. Whether you will live with me until I get my divorce? Or go with your father? He insists upon my staying here until everything is settled."

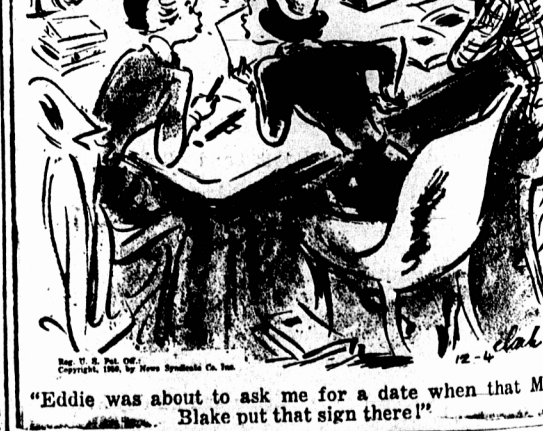

"To Anne it seemed in that moment as if her father and mother had receded from the foreground of her life where she had always placed them, to some dark region where her mind could not follow.

She murmured unsteadily, "I love you both and now I've got to give you up."
Her father said sharply, "Give us up?"
"Yes. When I go with Vicky I shan't come back. I shan't come back-ever."

As she went away Elinor and Francis stared at each other. This was what they had done! This was their punishment, that the daughter whom they adored would have none of them.
Yet when the moment of separation came, Anne went in Francis' arm and clung to her mother. "Can't we all go back, can't we? Just as we were?" "Can't we Elinor?"
