the doctors approve of Scott's Emulsion. For whom? For men and women who are weak, when they should be strong; for babies and children who are thin, when they should be fat; for all who get no nourishment from their food. Poor blood is starved blood. Consumption and Scrofula never come without this starvation. And nothing is better for starved blood than cod-liver oil. Scott's Emulsion is cod-liver oil with the fish-fat taste taken out.

TWO SINNERS.

BY HELEN B. MATHERS.

PART I.—CHAPTER I.

The woman had sinned and her husband had taken her back.

Side by side they walked up the long, straggling fisher street, each doorway yawning empty at their approach, only to fill with hostile faces when they had gone by, and the man's lips whitened as he shifted from one shoulder to the other the bundle containing the clothes Tamminy had taken with her when she left him and the children, forty-eight hours ago, never dreaming of return.

If she only had looked ashamed, muttered the women, but nature had no such thing as shame in her mind when she made Tamminy Fletcher, and not even for her sins could alter the poise of the sinner's head or the symmetry of her limbs, and while her beauty but made the more implacable her own sex, in some curious way it deepened the men's contempt for Steve, and rough was the handling he received at their tongues and bitter with insult the future he might expect at their hands. Had he killed the man, or even broken every bone in his skin, why then he might have been free to please his fancy and take the hussy back, but to sit down without striking a blow, to come to her whistle when she called, was to forfeit all claim to manhood and invite the kicks and jeers of the whole community.

"Aw, but he can't do wi'out a woman to fend for him," said a fisher-wife, scornfully. "Did you hear the childer cryin' for their mammy, an' he hadn't the sense to take in the milk we had put outside the door, 'cos he wouldn't let one o' us in?"

"An' he might arsk and arsk, but not one on us 'ud go now," said a young matron, who had been the beauty of the village till Tamminy came.

"Aw, ee'd go fast enough if Steve 'ud let 'ee, an' Mike salin' in furin' parts," said a shrewd-looking woman who had joined the group that stood looking after the pair, "an' 'twouldn't be the fust time you've been there," she added, significantly, in Cassandry's ear.

"It's a lie," whispered back the swarthaired, black-eyed girl fiercely, then aloud:—

"Steve were always a sight too good for her. What call had she to take up wi' that painter chap? 'E come foolin' after me, 'e did; sed I'd make a glorious Rebeker—an' I Rebekered him with a clout in the 'ead—an' then 'e took up wi' Tamminy, an' she were fool enough t' think 'twas her 'e wanted, when she wor but a dummy to make a picture out o'!"

"Aw," said the shrewd-faced woman, "them as sins i' the dark is allus hard on they as trips i' the noonday. 'Sin as is hidden is half forgiven,' but, Cassandry, woman, Steve 'ud rayther have Tamminy covered wi' shame than any ither sweetheart clane, an' 'e just can't live wi'out her, and that's the truth."

"Till she runs away agen," said Cassandry, sullenly.

"Aw, she wont—shev'e had a bad scare. Did 'ee see her eyes? 'Tis the way her head's set on—she can't help carryin' it high—but we needn't ha' runned away, for she didn't see us no more'n a row o' cabbages. 'Tis that way a soul looks when it's punishment's afore and not a-hind on 'em, an' I wouldn't stand in Tamminy's shoes for somethin' today. 'Tis many a man thinks he can forgi' a woman when she's shamed him, but his stomach turns at it when 'tis forgiveness for breakfast an' dinner an' tea."

"T'other one sickened o' her pretty quick," sneered Cassandry; "a matter of twenty-four hour, an' home 'e sends her packing! An' then Dan comes flyin' up to say she's settin' in the coombe up yon, an' sez: 'Will Steve, go d'reckly an' fetch her?' An' Steve goes."

The concentrated scorn of her voice hit like an acid, and Cassandry's enemy held up her weather-beaten hands in angry rebuke.

"Lord, how you hate the woman!" she said. "If t'was only to spite 'ee, she oughter to ha' kep straight! P'raps Steve ain't such a saint arter all," added Martha, darkly, and with a look before which Cassandry's black eyes fell. "Anyway, what she's done she's repented on, which is more than some folks as haven't been found out can say!"

Meanwhile the man and woman had climbed the hill and now paused outside a cottage that stood in a small garden in which unwatered stocks and carnations drooped, while from the closed door no sound of children's voices issued, all being still and silent as the grave.

Something seemed to take Tamminy by the throat; wild thoughts of treachery, of crime even, flashed through her brain. He had killed the children. This was his revenge on her; this the reason of his docility, when turning to him as her god, and expecting but scant mercy, he had come out to bring her home. Tottering over the threshold, only the empty room greeted her. He had only sent them away. And then sight returned to her eyes, for behind the door in their wooden cot lay fast asleep a rosy boy and girl, with the tears not yet dry upon their cheeks. She dropped like a stone beside them, and with a sob laid her head down upon their little innocent breasts. How long ago was it that she had left this pure haven to be a stranger's light o' love? How long since she had nourished evil thoughts against the man who, God-like, had resisted the world's command to stone and cast her out, and had forgiven and reinstated her in her home?

Steve had set down the bundle, and now was kindling the fire and filling the kettle to make tea. He had got through his agony during those hours when in the deserted home his children had wept and called out in vain for "Mammy." Who shall say what memories crowd the heart of the man who yet loves the woman who has betrayed him, what visions of her innocent youth, what piteous thoughts plead for her in his breast, while her children's eyes cry out to him for forgiveness of her sin? Even though it be as scarlet he cannot in a moment unwind the strands that mutual love and habit have bound about their lives, and the man in him being stronger than the judge, he hearkens more to the exhortations of mercy than those commands to vengeance that only those of austerely pure life may venture to obey.

God kept his own reckoning, and Steve knew that God had chosen in this instance to make one man and one woman even.

So when Steve received Tamminy's message, he did not hesitate for a moment what he should do. He went straight out and fetched her home, saying no word, good or bad, concerning past or future, as they came. He had taken her back. Could she ever forget his tall figure striding swiftly through the coombe and shouldering her bundle, making a gesture to her to follow, till on entering the village he had fallen back and walked beside her.

And now the moment had come when they must look in each other's eyes, when he must show all noble as one who forgives by reason of the Godhead that is in him, or pitiful as the weak flesh that shuts his eyes to the vileness of what he loves, lest that delicate morsel of pleasure be taken from it and he be left in hungering. Tamminy had picked up and put on the cotton apron that she had flung down, how many years ago? when she thought that in throwing off her duty to him she could throw off mother's love also and all that a good woman holds dear.

And now Steve and she were sitting opposite each other at the table, and between them the little fair heads were bobbing over their mugs of milk and the childish voices were chattering. It was all just as though she had never been away at all, and already the children's grief was forgotten and their little world was full of joy again. But Tamminy neither ate nor drank, and seeing that Steve's meal was also but pretense, she lifted her head at last and spoke.

"Eh, Steve," she said, pitifully, "why did 'ee take me back?"

"For the children's sake," he said, but she shook her head, for his voice did not ring true.

"Eh, but I misdoubt me you're playin' wi' me," she said, sadly. "G'ee me my punishment, lad; hae it out wi' me, but don't go about softly, wishin' me dead. Well enough I know I ha' bruk your love, but whiles ago 'twas you that bruk mine. An' I daurna say ought to 'ee or be jealous of 'ee again, for I've ta'en away the right to say anythin'."

"'Tis ill work talkin' o' love atwixt you and me," he said, roughly. "You look after the little ones, I'll look after the work, an' the shed'll do for me to lie in, an' to take our bite an' sup together won't poison us."

He had risen and was looking out at his nets. His man's world had to be faced and conquered, and he meant to get over it at once, and start fair and square with the new life in the morning. Turning in the doorway he looked back to where she stood, her little ones clinging about her knees, eyeing him with hostile glances, conscious that in some way he was hurting "Mammy."

"Let things bide," he said with a sternness that well became him, and the woman's heart thrilled, for he was master alike of himself and of her. "I've put 'ee back in your own place, an' the man or woman who says nay to that 'll answer to me for it, but if ever your lover comes sneakin' round, I'll kill the pair o' 'ee—that will I afore God."

AN ALARMING INCREASE.

The Prevalence of Female Complaints Found to Result Largely From the Kidneys

SAGINAW, Mich., July 13.—Doctors are beginning to turn their attention more exclusively to the causes for the great increase of what is known as female complaints during the past ten years and to remedies for the same. Many cases have been investigated, and among others that of Mrs. Reany, of Ashland, Wis., who was cured of this form of trouble by the use of a kidney medicine known as Dodd's Kidney Pills, which originated in Canada, but has now become widely known and used throughout the western States. This and other similar cases go to show that the troubles are largely due to the kidneys and that the above mentioned remedy is likely to have a great effect in lessening the number of victims to this form of complaint.

Neal Dow is now 91 years old, and in vigorous health.

"The Railroad Kidney"

Railroad employes, bicyclists, teamsters and other men who are subjected to much jolting, are often troubled with a pain across the small of the back. This indicates the "Railroad Kidney," an insidious precursor of serious illness. On the slightest symptoms of backache take one Chase's Kidney Liver Pill—one is a dose—and thus obtain instant relief. For all kidney troubles they have no equal. 25c. per box.

Utah's juries now consist of eight instead of twelve men.

A Good Deal in a Few Words.

"I paid a Toronto specialist on catarrh a large sum of money, but I got no benefit. I tried them all, but finally, almost in despair, and assuredly without any faith, I tried Chase's Catarrh Cure. It is all that it is recommended, which is saying a good deal in a few words." Joel Rogers, clerk, Division Court, Beeton. Improved blower in each 25c. box.

If one could have his way during life, one wouldn't care much if his will were tested after his death.

Money no Object.

The amount of money sufferes from catarrh will spend in attempting to cure that foul and disagreeable disease is almost incredible. J. W. Jennings, of Gilford, Ont., says: "I spent between $200 and $300 consulting doctors; I tried all the 'treatments' without benefit. One box of Chase's Catrrh Cure did me more good than all the remedies. A 25c. box cured me." Don't waste money. Chase's Cure, with improved blower, 25c. It cures.

There are two classes who cannot bear prosperity—one of them being those who cannot get a chance to bear it.

Wore Greased Gloves Seven Years

John Siron, mason, Aultsville, Ont., had salt rheum so severe that for seven years he wore greased gloves. He writes: "I used a quarter of a box of Chase's Ointment. It cured me. No trace of salt rheum now." Chase's Ointment cures every irritant disease of the skin, allays itching instantly, and is a sterling remedy for piles. Avoid imitations. 60c. per box.

"Remember, my son," said the prudent father; "that politeness doesn't cost anything." "Yes," was the reply, "I've heard that." "You don't doubt it, do you?" "Well, it certainly costs me about ten shillings a week to get any politeness out of the waiters at our Hotel."

That Pale Face

For nervous prostration and anæmia there is no medicine that will so promptly and infallibly restore vigor and strength as Scott's Emulsion.

HINTS OF ALL SORTS.

Skeptics may tear the Bible to pieces, but they can make no reply to a consistent Christian life.

There is hope for the man who doesn't have to fall down more than once to learn how to stand up.

Darken mahogany or any other carved woods with cold drawn linseed oil. Brush it well in.

A good remedy for damp walls is to make a strong solution of alum and wash the walls down with it.

Do not soak fresh fish in water before cooking, as this treatment only ruins the flavor and makes it soft.

Flour for cakes or pastry should be well dried and passed twice through a sieve before using. Keep it afterward in a tin in the kitchen.

When boiling common starch sprinkle in a little fine salt, which will prevent it sticking. Some people use sugar in the same way, but it is not so effective as salt.

To clean oilcloths wash always with warm milk. Once in six months scrub with hot soapsuds, dry thoroughly and apply a coat of varnish. They will last as long again.

Oranges should be eaten freely as long as they are in season, for, besides being delicious fruit, they contain a large quantity of citric acid, so valuable for its medicinal qualities.

FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER.

Steam the rain spots on your velvet cape and brush up the pile with a whisk while holding the wrong side of the material over a steaming tea-kettle.

To take the creases out of your black silk skirt, either dip each piece in a bath of naphtha (remembering always that naphtha is very explosive) and hang out-of-doors to dry, or lay a wet sheet on the right side of the silk, and iron until dry. Unfortunately, this latter method is apt to remove the gloss.
