your child

You note the difference in children. Some have nearly every ailment, even with the best of care. Others far more exposed pass through unharmed. Weak children will have continuous colds in winter, poor digestion in summer. They are without power to resist disease, they have no reserve strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is cod-liver oil partly digested and adapted to the weaker digestions of children.

appendage to it, however, on which my eyes were riveted, and which suggested the most useful rather than the most ornamental. This was a trigger-like arrangement upon the lid to which a coil of string was attached. Beside this trigger there was a small square aperture through the wood. The tall man, Flannigan, as his companion called him, applied his eye to this, and peered in for several minutes with an expression of intense anxiety upon his face.

"It seems right enough," he said at last.

"I tried not to shake it," said his companion.

"Such delicate things need delicate treatment. Put in some of the needles, Muller."

The shorter man fumbled in his pocket for some time, and then produced a small paper package. He opened this, and took out of it half a handful of whitish granules, which he poured through the hole. A curious clicking noise followed from the inside of the box, and both the men smiled in a satisfied way.

"Nothing much wrong there," said Flannigan.

"Right as a trivet," answered his companion.

"Look out! There's some one coming. Take it down to your berth. It wouldn't do to have any one suspecting what our game is, or, worse still, have them fumbling with it, and letting it off by mistake."

"Well, it would come to the same, whoever let it off," said Muller.

"They'd be rather astonished if they pulled the trigger," said the taller, with a sinister laugh. "Ha, ha! fancy their faces! It's not a bad bit of workmanship, I flatter myself."

"No," said Muller. "I hear it is your own design, every bit of it, isn't it?"

"Yes, the spring and the sliding shutter are my own."

"We should take out a patent."

"And the two men laughed again with a cold, harsh laugh, as they took up the little brass-bound package, and concealed it in Muller's voluminous overcoat.

"Come down, and we'll show it in our berth," said Flannigan. "We won't need it until to-night, and it will be safe there."

His companion assented, and the two went arm-in-arm along the deck and disappeared down the hatchway, bearing the mysterious little box away with them.

The last words I heard were a muttered injunction from Flannigan to carry it carefully, and avoid knocking it against the bulkheads.

How long I remained sitting on that deck I shall never know. The horror of the conversation I had just finished was aggravated by the first sinking qualms of sea-sickness. The long view of the Atlantic was before me, and I felt as if I were about to be hurled overboard.

"No you mind moving out of that, sir!" he said. "We want to get this lumber cleared off the deck."

One of the quarter-boats was hanging rather low down upon the davits. An idea struck me, and, climbing on the bulkheads, I stepped into the empty boat and lay down in the bottom of it. Stretched on my back, with nothing but the blue sky above me, and an occasional view of the mizzen as the vessel rolled, I was at least alone with my sickness and my thoughts.

I tried to recall the words which I had heard spoken in the terrible dialogue I had overheard. Would they admit of any construction but the one which started me in the face? My reason forced me to confess that they would not. I endeavored to array the various circumstances which formed the chain of circumstantial evidence, and to find a flaw in it; but no, not a link was missing. There was the strange way in which the passengers had come aboard, enabling them to evade any examination of their luggage. The very name of "Flannigan" snatched of Fenimore's while "Muller" had been nothing but socialism and murder. Their mysterious manner; their remark that their plans would have been ruined had they missed the ship; their fear of being observed; last, but not least, the clinching evidence in the production of the little square box with the trigger, and their grim joke about the face of the man who should let it off by mistake—could these facts lead to any conclusion other than that they were the desperate emissaries of some body, political or otherwise, who intended to murder themselves, their fellow-passengers, and the ship, in one great holocaust?

The whitish granules which I had seen one of them pour out into the box formed no doubt a fuse for exploding it. I had myself heard a sound come from it which might have emanated from some delicate piece of machinery. But what did this mean by their allusion to to-night? Could it be that they contemplated putting their horrible design into execution on the very first evening of our voyage? The mere thought of it sent a cold shudder over me, and made me for a moment superior even to the agonies of sea sickness.

Hands and Feet Got Stiff AS THOUGH PARALYZED. A grateful young lady is Miss Annie Shepherd, of North Pelham, Ont., who writes as follows:—I had two very bad spells of it and was obliged to call in the doctor. My hands and feet would get stiff as though I was paralyzed. I had to quit work and tried doctor's medicine, but did not get any help until I got Manley's Ointment. I am restored to health again and can highly recommend it to any one who may suffer as I did. I am gaining in flesh and am well now.

The Truth to Children.

Tell a child always the truth about everything, no matter how trivial or unimportant it may be, and it will soon come to have a perfect confidence in everything you say. A little one declines to go into a dark room to bring out the doll that was left there because someone has told it of a great bogey-man that lurks in dark apartments, ready to spring upon the little children. Nurses should be trained to tell the truth regarding the most unimportant happenings and affairs. Parents should consider well before punishing into words hasty or ill-considered speech, for little minds are quick to grasp the meaning, and their memories are wonderfully retentive.

A MESSAGE TO MEN. Promote the True Honesty and True Philanthropy Still Exist.

If any man who is weak, nervous and debilitated, or who is suffering from any of the various troubles resulting from overwork, will take heart and write to me, I will send him confidentially and free of charge the plan proposed by which I was completely restored to perfect health and manhood, after years of suffering from Nervous Debility, Loss of Vigor and Organic Weakness.

I have nothing to sell, and therefore want no money, but as I know through my own experience how to sympathize with such sufferers, I am glad to be able to assist any fellow-beings to a cure. I am well aware of the prevalence of quackery, for I myself was deceived and imposed upon until I nearly lost faith in mankind but I rejoice to say that I am now perfectly well and happy once more and am desirous therefore to make this certain means of cure known to all. If you will write to me you can rely upon being cared and the prompt satisfaction of having been of great service to one in need will be sufficient reward for my trouble. Absolute secrecy assured. "Dodd's Kidney Pills Have Saved My Life" This is said by Thousands—Prevention the safest.

"In the valley and shadow of death"—"Given up to die." These are many the words of such living in Canada today who say: "Dodd's Kidney Pills have saved my life."

No matter to what stage the disease may have come, do not despair. The triumph of Dodd's Kidney Pills has been won in exactly such fights for life.

People make mistakes, and jump to wrong conclusions; doctors themselves do not always know. It is much safer to take Dodd's Kidney Pills than to take chances. Of course there are grave cases having simple beginnings, and that is the time that a single box prevents, which is better than curing.
