"You know him?"

"Known him for years. I hadn't seen him since he played for me in Berlin last winter."

"I've had my suspicions about Hugo."

"You needn't have."

"I thought he was taking her for a ride."

"He's not. She's taking him for a ride. He said she does nothing but torture him and every other man she gets into her clutches."

"What about these other men she's got her clutches on?"

"For heaven's sake, can't a woman that good-looking have a little bit of a good time? What do you care? You're having a good time right now? I'll sock you if you say you're not."

"Believe it or not, this is my first offense."

"And you've got her, haven't you?"

"No. I'm just one other man she has got her clutches on, one more step to torture."

"You poor dear. You are crazy about her, aren't you?"

"Come on; what about these other men?"

She thought a long time, and then said, "Leonard, I'm not going to tell you any more of what Hugo said, except this: That no man gets any favors from her, if that's what you're worried about. And especially Hugo doesn't. She sees that they keep excited, but inside she's as cold as ice, and thinks of nothing but herself."

"You're not telling me anything I don't know."

"I hate that woman."

"I spent half my time hating her and half my time being insane about her. What's she got, anyway?"

"One thing she's got is a face that a man would commit suicide for. Another thing she's got is a figure that if he wasn't quite dead percentage of effort instead of spending all one's energy on a scrub brush is what makes a well-adjusted, balanced woman of the house—a wife and mother who is really doing a good job.

You are right to keep your own home, and to turn down the kind invitation to share your daughter's polished premises. You would never be at ease in the house, and would yourself become an object of daughter's irritation. Continue your visits and lend a hand wherever possible; more than that I'm afraid you cannot do.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Recently I've been going with a boy I like very much. My parents also like him. The trouble is, he says I'm always talking with my friends but when I'm with him I have nothing to say. Personally, I think a boy prefers a girl who doesn't talk a lot.

ANSWER: The amount of talking a girl does on a date depends on her escort's conversational ability. If he doesn't talk much, she must fill in the gaps. If he's a good talker, it's up to her to be a good listener. In your case, the responsibility for keeping up a conversation depends on you. Don't shrink it. Before a date, read up on whatever sports your boy friend likes, learn some jokes or anecdotes, listen to a few radio programs. With this material, plus some small talk or school affairs, you should be able to carry on.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm 14 and have been going with a boy for six months. He has just been asked by his brother to come to another state to help with the family for a while. He'll be gone four to six months. He has told me to go out with other boys while he's gone, but I'd rather wait for him. What do you advise?

ANSWER: Your friend is quite right. At 14 you're too young to be so seriously concerned with one boy only. Make new friends and don't spend the time of your friend's absence moping.

"He's not. She's taking him for a ride. He said she does nothing but torture him and every other man she gets into her clutches."

"What about these other men she's got her clutches on?"

"For heaven's sake, can't a woman that good-looking have a little bit of a good time? What do you care? You're having a good time right now? I'll sock you if you say you're not."

"Believe it or not, this is my first offense."

"And you've got her, haven't you?"

"No. I'm just one other man she has got her clutches on, one more step to torture."

"You poor dear. You are crazy about her, aren't you?"

"Come on; what about these other men?"

She thought a long time, and then said, "Leonard, I'm not going to tell you any more of what Hugo said, except this: That no man gets any favors from her, if that's what you're worried about. And especially Hugo doesn't. She sees that they keep excited, but inside she's as cold as ice, and thinks of nothing but herself."

"You're not telling me anything I don't know."

"I hate that woman."

"I spent half my time hating her and half my time being insane about her. What's she got, anyway?"

"One thing she's got is a face that a man would commit suicide for. Another thing she's got is a figure that if he wasn't quite dead percentage of effort instead of spending all one's energy on a scrub brush is what makes a well-adjusted, balanced woman of the house—a wife and mother who is really doing a good job.

You are right to keep your own home, and to turn down the kind invitation to share your daughter's polished premises. You would never be at ease in the house, and would yourself become an object of daughter's irritation. Continue your visits and lend a hand wherever possible; more than that I'm afraid you cannot do.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Recently I've been going with a boy I like very much. My parents also like him. The trouble is, he says I'm always talking with my friends but when I'm with him I have nothing to say. Personally, I think a boy prefers a girl who doesn't talk a lot.

ANSWER: The amount of talking a girl does on a date depends on her escort's conversational ability. If he doesn't talk much, she must fill in the gaps. If he's a good talker, it's up to her to be a good listener. In your case, the responsibility for keeping up a conversation depends on you. Don't shrink it. Before a date, read up on whatever sports your boy friend likes, learn some jokes or anecdotes, listen to a few radio programs. With this material, plus some small talk or school affairs, you should be able to carry on.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm 14 and have been going with a boy for six months. He has just been asked by his brother to come to another state to help with the family for a while. He'll be gone four to six months. He has told me to go out with other boys while he's gone, but I'd rather wait for him. What do you advise?

ANSWER: Your friend is quite right. At 14 you're too young to be so seriously concerned with one boy only. Make new friends and don't spend the time of your friend's absence moping.
