AUGUST 3, 1892.

The Trade Question in British Elections.

An important letter is published in the London Times over the signature of Howard Vincent, the well-known English advocate of Imperial Reciprocity. Mr. Vincent asserts that the success of the Conservatives in Great Britain—apart from Ireland—is largely due to their advocacy of fair trade. He brings forward proofs in support of his assertion that the artisan class rallied to the support of those candidates who had shown by their public acts and avowals that they favored a fair trade tariff, and he adds:—"No wonder, when statistics show that in the United States the cost of living is lower and wages 77 per cent. higher than here." It may, indeed, be true that Lord Salisbury is not such a fool as some of the politicians and papers pictured him subsequent to the delivery of his speech at Hastings. It is certain that his utter defeat, not alone in Ireland, but in England, and Scotland as well, was confidently predicted, and it is certain that, apart from Ireland, he has a majority. Granted that the Salisbury Government was, in itself, as unpopular as its opponents said that it was, there must have been some cause for his unexpected success in the English elections. Nor is it unreasonable in Colonel Vincent to contend that the cause lies in the position taken by Lord Salisbury and many of his Conservative supporters as to the reconstruction of the British tariff upon business principles. It is evident that the British workmen, the skilled mechanics and small business men, are becoming tired of the aggressively hostile trade policies of the United States and other foreign nations, and, Briton-like, feel like hitting back. They see these nations prospering and going on to prosperity, while Great Britain is the dumping ground for their surplus and refuse manufactures, admitted free of duty, to be disposed of at any price. Lord Salisbury counseled a more business-like policy than absolute free trade, and they have given him an unexpected support.

Notes and Comments.

The Lunenburg Argus, and other papers are advocating the erection of summer hotels around the western shore of Nova Scotia. Like advice ought not to be thrown away upon those who are interested in making P. E. Island a place of general resort for tourists. The issue of the Maritime Grocer in Halifax is significant of the strides which the trades are taking. The first number of the Maritime Grocer is fully up to the standard of the trades journal of the Upper Provinces. Its editor and business manager is Mr. C. P. McLennan. Success to the Maritime Grocer.

As a revenue reduction measure the McKinley law accomplished that one of its purposes which was approved by both political parties in their platforms of 1888. The total receipts for the past fiscal year were $356,933,302, or $45,402,862 less than in the preceding fiscal year, in which the old sugar duties were collected for nine months, or up to April 1, 1891. The amount paid out in sugar bounties, as shown by Internal Revenue Commissioner Masca's preliminary report, was $7,342,077, making the total revenue reduction due to the McKinley law $52,384,937.

The Boston Daily Globe publishes the following telegram respecting the choice of the next Pope:

LONDON, July 30.—A telegram from Paris to-night says: "France is asked to push Cardinal Rampolla. If it should become evident that Rampolla cannot be chosen, the cardinals, it is urged, should boldly vote for Cardinal Gibbons, during whose rule Italy would drift into a Republican form of government, the Catholics of the world concurring at the change."

So it appears that our distinguished visitor has at least a chance of election to the Papal Throne.

Five carloads of fresh California peaches, plums, pears, apricots and other fruits arrived in New York on Tuesday night and were shipped to Europe Wednesday morning by the White Star line steamship Majestic. This is the beginning of an exportation to Liverpool for English consumption of a great Pacific coast product, and it is, says the New York Press, more important in its bearing on the national policy of protection than any recent event. The fruit, grapes, raisin and wine industries of California have been built up under a protective tariff until all of them have an enormous home consumption. With California fruit entering into European exportation, it may be anticipated that the raisins and wines of California will also become articles of export.

The commercial classes of the Eastern States are almost unanimously opposed to President Harrison's retaliation programme. Their opinion is expressed by the New York Commercial Bulletin, one of the leading trade journals, which says:

"There is nothing in the current comment on the action of Congress, in passing a Canadian retaliation bill, to suggest that the exercise of the power thus conferred upon the President would be either popular or effective. Congress acted wisely in avoiding a discussion of the measure that could have produced no good results, and would only have added to the difficulty of an amicable settlement. The passage of the bill at the president's request leaves the responsibility entirely with him, and he cannot assume it with too great caution. Comments of the Canadian press indicate, as should have been obvious to every one, that the threat of retaliation can only engender ill feeling, and that actual resort to such a policy would cause more serious complications, and would doubtless inflict greater injury on our own than on Canadian interests. The resort to retaliatory measures as a means of enforcing a settlement of international differences is, under any circumstances, extremely objectionable, and the reasons for avoiding such action in the present case are more than ordinarily strong and convincing."

A petition has been received at Ottawa for the revocation of the Canada Temperance Act in the county of Drummond, Ontario, and a poll will be held on the 18th August.

The Canadian Lancet gives credence to the statements that the daily average of cholera deaths in Russia has been over 500, and that in Paris at least half the people attacked by the epidemic have died.

Meeting of Presbytery.

The regularly quarterly meeting of the Presbytery of P. E. Island was held yesterday in St. James' Hall. There was a large attendance of ministers and elders. Rev. Thomas Corbett, of Tyne Valley, was elected moderator for the ensuing six months and Rev. A. W. Mahon of St. Peter's Road, clerk for the year. A petition from the Bedouque section of the congregation of Bedouque and Summerfield was presented, praying for the separation of their sections and the erection of Bedouque into a separate and distinct congregation. The petition was granted and a committee subsequently appointed to visit Summerfield and adjacent congregations, with a view of obtaining information to enable the Presbytery to make the best arrangement of the field.

At 3 p. m., a deputation from the W. C. T. U., of Charlottetown, consisting of Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Matheson and Mrs. Alexander Brown, waited upon the Presbytery to solicit their co-operation in urging upon the Board of Education the adoption of the Pathfinder series for the purpose of scientific temperance instruction in our common schools.

A committee to visit the churches of the Presbytery was appointed to examine the books, and if found satisfactory, to give them their endorsement. A difference between certain families in Little Sands and the congregation of Murray Harbor South and Little Sands as to the use of church, was on motion referred to a committee to devise the best means of settlement. Reports were presented from the Commissioners who attended the General Assembly in Montreal and from the Treasurer of the Presbytery. An overture on the working of Foreign Missions was received and ordered to be transmitted to the Synod of the Maritime Provinces.

Standing committees for the year were appointed, the following being conveners: Augmentation—Rev. G. McMillan. Temperance—Rev. W. P. Archibald. Sabbath Schools—Rev. J. B. Coffin. State of Religion—Rev. D. Sutherland. Statistics—Mr. T. C. James.

Relies from our Pioneers.

Among the latest contributions to the Pioneer collection is a razor case made of wood in Colossy a century ago, and taken to this island in the emigrant ship "Sprucer" in 1806, by an old pioneer who settled in Wood Islands. This old relic, contains in a good state of preservation, the fur of a black fox. A piece of turf from the Isle of Skye, by Rev. Malcolm Campbell, Strathalbyn; an oak sugar, by R. Carmichael, made from a piece taken out of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Glasgow, 600 years ago; a miniature painting of Royal Prince Charlie, and a silk garter worn by him on the field of battle, by Mrs. Wm. Hunt, of St. Eleanor's; a Charlottetown copy book 68 years old, and Lady Fanning's seal, by Nelson Bros.; the ledger used by the Cambridge firm at Charlottetown and Murray Harbor some 90 years ago, in the handwriting of the late Hon. Thomas Owen, father of the Hon. Lieut. Owen of this city, (the names of a large number of the pioneers, who dealt with that good old firm are to be seen in that old ledger); also, a piece of tartan worn by Major Alex. Macdonald on the day of the battle of Culloden, by John Andrew Macdonald, Esq.

English Politics.

T. P. O'CONNOR PUBLISHES THE LIBERAL PROGRAMME.—A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS DISCUSSES THE SITUATION.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—T. P. O'Connor, in an article in the Liberal Government has been decided upon. The first bill to be introduced at the next session will be a home rule measure, followed by "one man one vote" and the payment of members' bills and a radical budget. This government will also introduce the principle of taxing ground rents. The second session of parliament will be devoted to the agricultural bills, including a compulsory allotment measure. It is probable that even before the question of home rule is brought before the House a short measure regarding the coercion act will be introduced, the debate on which will not extend over more than three nights.

(Member of Parliament Cable in N. Y. World.)

LONDON, July 30.—For the fourth time in his life Mr. Gladstone is at his favorite work of cabinet making. Tree felling he has at last been compelled to give up, but the still more congenial pastime of forming a ministry is once more within his reach.

It can scarcely be accounted a good omen that just as he is beginning to give out the leaves and fishes he should lose one of his majorities by a miscount of the ballot papers by which a home ruler steps out and a unionist steps in. This will leave the liberal unionists with a strength of 47, the Gladstonians, including all sections, with 355, and the conservatives 208.

There is thus a nominal majority of forty for Mr. Gladstone, and to construct a ministry on that, considering the materials of which it is composed, is like building a house on the sands. Never in my time has so frail a foundation been laid for any administration.

The two great political clubs, the Carlton and the Reform, are the centres of considerable interest just now, for Lord Salisbury is not out yet, and it is in his power to confer many honors, and perhaps some few offices may fall in before he resigns. This is not at all a congenial occupation to him. He dislikes distributing honors, and he has a profound contempt for those who seek them.

But there are claims which cannot be ignored. So we shall presently hear of a shower of peerages, baronetcies, knight-hoods and other things for which some men and their wives sell their souls. The late leader of the House of Commons, W. H. Smith, once said to me: "If you could only see the list I have of applicants for honors and offices or something or other, it would make your hair turn grey. I never open it without shuddering."

Mr. Gladstone's belief that the list of applicants for honors and offices or something or other, it would make your hair turn grey. I never open it without shuddering. Mr. Gladstone's belief that the list of applicants for honors and offices or something or other, it would make your hair turn grey. I never open it without shuddering.

Of course, there are some who are sure of their positions, come what may. Mr. Morley will be the Irish secretary, though it is whispered he would prefer almost any other post. He sees terrible difficulties in the way of any settlement of the home rule question, but Mr. Gladstone naturally wants him to try and keep the Irish contingent in good order. Sir W. V. Harcourt must be the chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Charles Russell attorney general, and Lord Rosebery will get the foreign office. Mr. Mundell, no doubt, will be president of the education department. Something must be done with Sir George Trevelyan, who is the weathercock of politics, and Henry Fowler may be put into the treasury.

There are half a dozen earls and lords to be stuffed in somewhere, greatly to the disgust of the main body of Mr. Gladstone's party, who are dead against any more traffic with "blasted aristocrats."

There is no reason why they are secretly impatient to get rid of Mr. Gladstone and begin the real twentieth century ministry with Knights of Labor and eight-hour men in front and your highly respected old whigs and "bought earls" sent to Jericho.

Herein lies Mr. Gladstone's present difficulty. He is not a radical at heart, and, especially when in office, he has a great respect for the peerage, to which he has made more additions than any other minister of the Victorian era. He wants to reward his old friends, but the new men are downright radicals, who would abolish the House of Lords altogether, and would not stop even there. What is he to do with them?

The labor party is small, but his majority is made up of small parties. John Burns, the socialist, is to have no recognition, and Joseph Arch, the rural agitator, is to have nothing. Mr. Labouchere will give no trouble. In this respect he prefers playing Mephistopheles to parting with his independence. Truth brings him in over ten thousand a year, and finally reached the Park Hotel where he scented the dead man and made frantic efforts to get into the room where the body lay. It was necessary to chain the dog before the body could be removed.

The Moncton Tragedy.

PARTICULARS CONCERNING THE BURGULARY.

PARTICULARS of the killing of Policeman Steadman were given by THE EXAMINER yesterday. The Moncton Times gives the following additional particulars concerning the guilty men:—

THE PRISONER. The prisoner refused to talk last night, any more than to say that he did not do the shooting. He refused to give his name. He is a young man about 30, 5 feet 7 or 8 inches tall, weighs probably 150 pounds, has high cheek bones, small eyes, and is bushy and rough looking. His face evidently has not been shaved for several weeks.

THE MAN WHO ESCAPED. The man who escaped is of middle age, probably 40, was dressed in black clothes, dark shirt, wore a necktie with black spots, whiskers three or four weeks growth, and had no hat on when he escaped.

MRS. DONNELLY'S STATEMENT. Mrs. Donnelly, the proprietress of the house, said the man whose arrest was attempted, came to her place on Saturday forenoon. They drove here in a carriage and said they were sailors. They gave no names, but one fellow called the other "Jim," while Jim called his chum "old man."

They stayed S-tuesday night and all day Sunday and night, going out and staying away from the house between meals. On Monday they came in for their supper about 4 o'clock, hurrying me out, saying they were going away on the C. P. R. One of them went out and was gone for a little while, when he came back and said his clothes were not done, and they were too late for the C. P. R. They went out again after tea and came in later on, saying that they were going away to-night (Monday) and wanted to pay up. They each had a five dollar bill which one of them asked to have changed. After paying they did not seem to be in a hurry to go away. When the marshal entered the front door someone said the police are coming, and one of the men, the light-complexioned one, who was standing in the dining-room by the table with his hands in his pockets, sang out, "Hi, Jim," and like a flash went out of the back door. I started upstairs, and heard the shooting as I got to the head of the stairs.

THE SUSPICIOUS CHARACTERS MRS. STEADMAN SAW. Mrs. Steadman, wife of deceased, tells of three suspicious looking characters she saw lurking about yesterday afternoon. She says that she and another lady went over across Hall's Creek to pick berries. Going out they saw three men on the other side of Hall's Creek bridge on the railway track. One of them had something in his hands that looked like an iron bar, and seemed to be doing something about the rails. When we approached they went down off the track and crossed on the road bridge. When we came back, between five and six o'clock, there were three men lying under the bridge. One of them was quite tall with a light mustache, light hair and striped pants. Another one was shorter and wore a dark suit of clothes. He had short whiskers all over his face, had a short nose and was quite thickly built. The third fellow we saw when we came back I could hardly tell what he looked like, as he was lying down when we came past. Shortly after six o'clock, after Mr. Steadman had gone on duty, I saw the same two fellows we saw at Hall's Creek Bridge, pass down Telegraph Street by the house and remarked to a friend that those were the two fellows we saw over by Hall's Creek and said they looked like tramps. I am positive that these were the same two fellows we saw on the track. They went down under the bridge. We did not like the looks of the men.

THE DEAD MAN. The deceased was the son of the late William Steadman. He was born in Moncton and was 44 years of age. He has two brothers and two sisters living. The brothers are John F. Steadman of the I. C. R., St. John, and the other James B. Steadman of Chelsea, Mass. The sisters are Mrs. John D. Henderson of Moncton, and Mrs. H. A. Jones of Beaton. He leaves a wife and one child. Mr. Jos. E. Steadman has been connected with the Moncton police force longer than any other man. He was appointed town marshal when Moncton was first incorporated, and for some years conducted the whole police force. He became connected with the force latterly about three years ago, and has since been doing duty as night policeman, a position he has always filled to the satisfaction of the community. As an officer he was fearless and bold in doing his duty, and his affable manner in the performance of such work for him many friends.

THE DEAD OFFICER'S DOG. It was a pitiable sight to watch the movements of the dog owned by the deceased officer, which always accompanied him on his beat. The poor animal wandered up and down the streets for a time, and finally reached the Park Hotel where he scented the dead man and made frantic efforts to get into the room where the body lay. It was necessary to chain the dog before the body could be removed.
