MARY HAWORTH Wife Should Be Informed Of Husband's Indebtedness

Dear Mary Haworth: Some time ago, in a gentleman's name, you asked me how much money he had been spending following an accident being injured in a motor car. I am not sure other since we were in grade school and I told him there was no money. He had a car accident. He has called me several times since then, asking me to meet him in my home. I have not met him once and he gave me a letter in which he said that he was having a hard time. Now people are saying that he is having a hard time. I should I forfeit the balance of the loan. I will not do this. My husband knows nothing of the loan, as she is very jealous and would raise a hell if she knew. But I don't want to be the subject of gossip. Please advise me. — G. B.

Dear G. B.: Your signature indicates that you are a "Miss," not a "Mrs." And the gist of your narrative sparks the surmise that the borrower was operating on the theory that you are a girl he might have married, who might still be amenable if he were free.

It is assuming, possibly, that an unexplored potential of romantic or sentimental feeling has existed between you and him, dating back to school days. Thus, following the accident, and needing money, he touched upon a loan, hoping (even confident) that you would befriend him in ready spirit.

Likely it is a psychological background or emotional undercurrent of that you, in dealing with the fellow, which acquaintances sense even if they can't test for their own speculations to the effect that a clandestine relationship is in progress.

As for how to tidy-up the situation, I think you should stick to the agreement, and be the first round of the transaction, that the loan is not a gift; that it is a loan.

Though you graciously allowed in the beginning (mindful of the man's financial plight) that there was to be "no hurry" in retiring the loan, you certainly will insist every right, this time, with most of the loan still outstanding. If you have not repaid payments will be appreciated.

The fact that the man's wife is a jealous person, who would raise the roof if she knew of the man's situation, is an age and pose in openly admitted (if necessary) that you lent the money in emergency to a "gentleman's agreement."

And that you expect to be repaid, as per his "gentleman's agreement" — "I will hold up your head and scorn the gossip" (or the jealous wife's attempts, if any, to read innuendo into your goodnaturedly lent) is naively unbusinesslike generosity in the matter.

But as to meeting the man in conspiratorial fashion for "partial repayment sessions," don't do it. In his concept, the fellow may fancy that in asking to see you, or in seeing you, he is repaying you.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The rain came, past yesterday's lowered clouds, the sun and its forecasts, a December storm now sweeps the Maritimes. So far rain and wind, and at present a snowfall, has been our portion of it. At Alderford, all in all however, this is not an enjoyable spell of weather, yet apparently by news reports and so far on the island, as the share of it some of our Maritime neighbors are experiencing. The sun stopped. A flash it was, all was left in a twinkling. The refrigerator for all at once was lighted, and candles. But the night is, and peaceful...
